Miss Denise Carlow, another friend of Mr Roach's said that Jim Joseph came up to her flat looking for his brother and told her: "Coin's cracking up down there, He thinks somebody is after him to kill him."

Mr Scully said that during the drive Mr Roach wanted to be taken to Bethnal Green police station but agreed instead to be taken to his borther's.

He directed Mr Scully to drive to Stoke Newington, He stopped just short of the police station and Mr Roach said: "Its's all right, I will be safe here". Instead of walking down a side street he walked up the road and into the police station.

Mr Scully said he did not see anyone else on the pavement. He drove slowly past the police station and saw someone standing in the entrance. Against the light he could not be sure it was Mr Roach, but he thought he was the only person in the police station lobby. He said Mr Roach had not been "hysterical" just "upset".

During Mr Scully's evidence the shotgun and a holdall that was found with Mr Roach's body was produced. It was shown that the gun could fit in the holdes only when the butt was off it and the gun was in a broken position.

The revised TV-am doubles its audience

TV-am has made a remarkable recovery in its audience since it launched its revised breakfast programmes last month, viewing figures re-leased by the Broadcasters' Audience Research Board

For the week ended June 5 the average weekday audience was 700,000 more than double the 300,000 for the previous week. From its low point of 200,000 in the middle of last month the station has quickly achieved a healthier look after changes at the company.

The latest average figure is only 100,000 short of the peak level of 800,000 reached in TV-am's first week of trans-mission at the beginning of

The week's programmes, presented by Nick Owen and Linda Berry, included items from Epsom for the Derby and an interview with Prince Michael about the thirtieth anniversary of the Queen's coronation, which helped to boost the audience.

In the same week BBC's Breakfast Time saw its audience drop from 1,700,000 to 1,300,000 although for the election Special with Sir Robin Day which followed it the

The BBC commented that the true figure for TV-am was 300,000, its previous average, because the total included the audience whenhe BBC's programme was not on the air.

It added that the loss of 400,000 was only partly because of the srength of TV-am's programmes. The comment suggests at least a recognition, if not a worry, about the increase in TV-am's

Pupils not to resit A levels

Thousands of A level students in London and the southeast of England will not have to resit their examinations. An inquiry by officials yesterday found no evidence to support a claim that papers had been stolen and sold for up to £100

But the London University examinations council acknowledged that security at its examination centre, where papers are held, was not tight enough and said immediate steps would be taken to

Mr Alan Stephenson, sec-retary of the council, admitted the difficulty of checking allegations that papers had been taken, but he said: I am as sure as I can possibly be that no question papers have got out".

The announcement will come as a relief to 5,500 pupils who sat A level nch on Wednesday and were told on emerging that they might have to retake the ramination. The claim was made anonymously by a university employee, who took specimen papers to The Standard, London's evening newspaper, and described security at the centre as "a joke".

The employee had been identified and interviewed by the board, Mr Stephenson said, and he now faced the prospect of losing his job.

The Director of Public Prosecutions is also considering charges after a man was interviewed by officers of the Metropolitan police serious

The Standard said their informant continued to maintain that the specimen papers being taken and sold. They also included history, due to be taken next Thursday.

Quest for a leader: The heirs presumptive to Labour's devastated political kingdom

Kinnock, Hattersley and Shore leading race for the Foot succession

It is cruel now to disinter the Kaufman. Tribune, the month- to deal firmly with the left, oct, but the fact is of vital piece of Labour's hard left, policies and personalities, but fact, but the fact is of vital iraportance as Labour re-enters the atmosphere of acrimony the atmosphere of acrimony must never again go into an caution. Perhaps it is his and recrimination over the election with leaders most of Liverpool upbringing, but his election debacle. A few months ago it was impossible to find a sympathy with the programme cunning. Perhaps it is that Labour MP who believed, on which they are supposed to which makes him something of privately, that Mr Michael Foot be campaigning." could lead the party to victory.

Cabinet had the gun, but no one had the courage to pull the trigger, perhaps fearing that the assassin would be a like the party itself is radically overhanded. to get rid of him. The Shadow assassin would be killed in the rush to fill the vacancy which would have been left by Mr Denis Healey's accession.

So, it was said, the unions make the first move. They muttered something about lection of MPs does not become demarcation problems, leaving an instrument for summary the MPs to do their own dirty work, and went back to counting their political funds in preparation for the daftest £2m election; bet in gambling his-

Perhaps Mr Foot's frontbench colleagues had it right. Perhaps no one, not even Mr Healey, could have salvaged the mess the party had been left in after four years of such bitter, bennile in-fighting. Perhaps it was best that Mr

Foot should pay the final, tragic penalty for his own conceit; the belief that he could ever unite, by persuasion, a party which needs to be driven by force, conspiracy, even fear.

Ironically, Mr Foot's apprentice. Mr Neil Kinnock, is now being spoken of as a favourite contender for the suede shoes of Mr Kinnock, however, has some drawbacks. At 41, he is certainly young enough to lead the party for another 20 years in the wilderness. But he espouses the same policies as Mr Foot, on disarmament and the Common Market, which so crippled the party in this week's election catastrophe.

But there is more to it than that. There are many MPs who recognize in Mr Kinnock the same weaknesses as Mr Foot. A lack of killer instinct, a lack of leadership, which might come with experience, but which makes him for the moment a

The power in the new Labour Party undoubtedly lies with three men: Mr Peter Shore, Mr Roy Hattersley and Mr Gerald

All the indications are that knows. He was not one of the unions, with the firm smack of leadership from Westminster, will finally put paid to A ticket of Shore-Kaufman, the party's experiment with Hattersley-Kaufman would be the state of in the election of their leaders.

All the indications are that

The question is: Who takes the Labour Party had finally cut on the leadership? Mr Healey is all links with the last four, out, if only because of his age disastrous years. and because of his nihilistic role during the election campaign. Mr Shore, aged 59, might be too old and too uncomfortable for some of the union powerbrokers, but he should not be written off by those who follow the bookies' odds. He has a wealth of experience which cannot be discounted and, on the EEC at least, he might offer the party a link between its past and its future.

But then who, in five years' time, will want to come out of the EEC after an election campaign which has so clearly crushed it as an issue?

Mr Hattersley, who made no secret of his dislike for that aspect of party policy, has the advantage of years. At 51, he has built himself a sound reputation for confronting difficult issues with aggression and integrity.

Politically, there is little to choose between Mr Shore and and personality.

Mr Shore would be expected

Hattersley-Kaufman would prove beyond any doubt that Hattersley-Kinnock would leave room for doubt, a hint that Mr Kinnock was there to put the brakes on.

As for the rest, the Silkins and the Heffers, if their egos drove them to run, there is little question that they would be annihilated. They have placed themselves firmly beyond the pale, if only because of the way in which they have bandled their respective portfolios of disarmament and EEC with-

But the mechanics of election will show the way soon enough. Battle-hardened Labour MPs will return to Westminster next week, with vivid memories of doorsten ordeals and of friends lost in the conflict, full of determination that it should the MP for Manchester Ardwick since 1970. His constituency is now Manchester Gorton. He is 52 and was educated at the Leeds Grammar School and Queen's College, Oxford. Mr Kaufman was a journalist on the Daily Mirror and was the New Statesman's political correspondent before he became an MP. He was Parliamentary

Under-Secretary of State in the Department of Employment from 1974 to 1975 and in the Department of Industry in 1975. He took over as Minister of State in the Department of Industry from

Tory victor says left beat Benn

Mr Jonathan Sayeed, the Conservative who toppled Mr Wedgwood Benn in Bristol East, put down his victory yesterday to "unpalatable policies of the far left". He said: "I did not kick Mr

Benn out, left-wing policies kicked him out. He has been a faithful servant of Bristol in his own way for 33 years. But it does not matter how good a constituency man you are if your policies are wrong. His arc

Mr Sayeed did not think he would be facing Mr Benn in a future election. "He is 59 now and will be 64 in 1988. If he is going to stage a comeback, he will have to do it before then."

Television Ulster in the house of horrors

Across the Water (BBC2) began at such a high level of intensity - "Hideous mutilation, un-thinkable pain ..." - that it was difficult to see how it would get down without going into a suicide dive; in fact, it chose not to do so and, by moving from realism to symbolism, even tried to concentrate that "unthinkable pain" still further. A small girl is kidnapped by her natural father and taken from her parents to Ulster, from which they all first came; her male parent, played well here by Liam Neeson, goes in pursuit.

David Rudkin's narrative brings together two powerful themes: the abduction of a small child and the Ulster problem itself. You could hardly get a more potent mixture, and all the writer need do is stir it. Certainly Mr Rudkin rarely over-exerts himself: the conversations are brief and elliptical, and Across the Water relies to a large extent upon the power of television to create a pervasive nebulous

The first part of this pro-duction was devoted to cryptic silences, and to intimations of horror or chaos which in the second half were brought, with a touch of grand guignol, to life. Because these intimations are mediated by images rather than words, Across the Water was more powerful as a film than as a human drama. The pictures of Northern Ireland were very striking, for example, and their careful selection managed to impart both a sense of history and a sense of dissolution.

I cannot help thinking though, that Ulster is now being mounted like a stuffed duck in the house of horrors. It is a convenient vehicle for every expression of public or private rage - "an imaginative cliché" which can be exploited rather than used. There were certainly elements of laziness within the film itself; it created a convincing picture of chaos and confusion but did not seen able to employ it in a particularly purposeful manner.

Peter Ackroyd Weekend choice

Ken Rossell's View of The Planets (tomorrow, ITV, 10.30pm), a South Bank Show film, is the cinematic equivalent of a scissors and paste job. It is Holst's suite with illustrations. Mr Russell has selected and cut out the pictures and his film editor son, Xavier, has stuck them together. It is, therefore, difficult to know whom to praise and whom to lambaste in assessing a work that is both brilliant and trite. It is a totally non-astronomical affair (the closest it gets to a heavenly body is the occasional naked girl) and is only obliquely astrological. It is at its most inventive with the Samm sequence (the life and death cycle of cars and roses; industrial pollution; a rotting rat) and (not surprisingly, considering that Russell père is something of necromancer himself) the Uranus sequence, with its living frieze of spellbinding figures from Nosferatu to the Pope. The surprise is that Mars, with its pictures of Man (Hitler etc.) and Nature (volcano) striking warlike attitudes, is interrupted so conventionally. Holst's music survives intact, in the Philadelphia Ormandy version: The comforting difference between Alan Plater's The Consultant (tonight BBC1, 10.10) and a previous BBC thriller serial about computer crime, Bird of Prey, is that Mr. Plater's adaptation of John McNeil's novel treats us, the viewers, as mere humans, slow to digest technological jargon, and not as so much electronic hardware, extensively programmed, permanently switched on. Hywel Bennett is the computer specialist, plan-ning to misapply his skill by skimming the cream off a bank's profits. Peerless pleasure

Peer Gynt The Pit

This swift, economical and very enjoyable production proves once again that a good studio theatre is the best place for staging practically anything. Provided, of course, that the words themselves can survive such close scrutiny - and, not surprisingly since it comes from David Rudkin, the acting version of this Peer Gynt has not a flat line nor an insipid word in it.

The quality of the play itself may be as uneven as its hero's adventures are far-ranging, but in the audience there was alertness and pleasure.

The use of an Ulster idiom, as well as making a richness in peasant speech perfectly naturisk of folksiness. Meeting the Devil himself dressed in a cassock at a lonely crossroads, hearing the voice of a mountain demon or leaves or dewdrops, seems as credible and awesome

Peer, the compulsively mantic country boy gives Derek Jacobi no trouble. But behind the charm and giddy fancies there is always, glimpsed at moments, a hardness which wakens the villagers' instincts to keep their distance. The links with Peer the middle-aged capitalist in Act IV are few, and

But, as always it is bard to feel we are watching the same character, especially as the successful Peer has shed every trace of an accent. Only as his travels come full circle, in the closing minutes, does his native speech return. In his final grizzled dignity (the plump face beneath the top hat has the look of Thackeray, even a little of Ibsen himself) Mr Jacobi finds a vocal colour I have never heard from him before.

Derek Jacobi gets the Thackeray touch as he meets the Strange Passenger (Nigel Hawthorne)

Henry VIII makes a rare and risky appearance

Henry VIII, which opens at Stratford on Tuesday, is the Royal Shakespeare Company's one "risk" production for the season according to Trevor Nunn, joint artistic director of the company; with the need for high box-office receipts, even one risk is almost too much. The production of Henry VIII, not performed at Stratford for 14 years, has been entrusted to Howard Davies. This is his second production for the big Stratford stage, following his debut last year with Macbeth after more than four years spent running the RSC's Warehouse

صكذا من الاحل

Davies emphatically refutes any suggestion that the risk is involved because it is not a good play, and gives several reasons for its rare appearance. First is that the play uses state occasions as propaganda in the changing role of the king and his people, and they demand a cast of 80 to 90, making it a huge and epic piece. The size can be scaled down, and is with this production, but the cast still remains large, and the cost therefore high. The play is also marked by its historical inaccuracies, which have led critics to decry its importance.

Davies believes that Shakespeare started by asking "What would be the most interesting play about Henry VIII?" and was not too concerned with chronological facts. "It is a play about the transference of power from an absolute monarchy to a constitutional monarchy, from off with his head rule to the use of a privy council. Henry changes because of the circum stances, seeing the need for peace in the expectation that the kingdom will be run by a future think Shakespeare should have stopped with The Tempest, instead of having other works finished for him. It would have been tidier." much for the difficulties.

There is also, of course, the flaw that Shakespeare wrote only part of the play, which was completed by John Fletcher.

Davies sees Henry VIII as very much a modern play, dealing with taxes, unemployment and social divisions as the nobility realize that they may have to share power with the new rising middle class. Davies spent some time looking at pictures of the king, and found the drawings by Holbein more interesting than the portraits because they seemed to indicate an attitude of mind. He also saw that the drawings empha-sized the face and hands, leaving the rest to fade away, an image which he hopes will be recaptured in the costumes for the production, which are by Deidre Clancy.

For Davies and the cast Henry VIII was virtually a new play - only three had seen it and two had read it. So the first cast meetings were spent in estab-lishing how much they knew of the period. They were strong on the social atmosphere, says Davies, but not so good on the facts - just like Shakespeare. He insisted that they learnt more about the period, conscious that the audience itself will be well

The three main characters in the play are Henry, played by Richard Griffiths, a suitably upholstered actor, Katherine of Aragon, played by Gemma Jones, and Cardinal Wolsey, played by John Thaw. It is set before and during the king's passion for Anne Bullen, when he was in his early forties and at the height of his power.

Davies does not see Henry VIII as a risk, although he admits that having to treat it as a new play makes it "pretty nerveracking, but exciting". It is just possible that its reputation as a risk has nothing to do with it as a play. It was in performance at the Globe Theatre in 1613 when a cannonball was accidentally fired. burning the theatre down.

Radio Knight retreats after a good joust

As I write, a relative hush has and throughout these campaign fallen on the wavelengths, The weeks, I think he has done us noise of strife has momentarily listeners a thorough service. ceased while the electorate tidal wave of assertion, counterassertion, insult and vainglory of the last few weeks have affected it. But it is a very brief hush: tonight with Election 83 and Jimmy Young's Election Special we shall be deafened by hoarse cries of triumph over the vanquished and after that-a process which will rarely have got its first wind by the time you read this- we will be treated to the counting and subsequent dissection of the corpses.

But this morning, for only the second day in succession, there is no Election Call, no Robin Day like a rugged and experi-enced matador, skilfully deflect-ing a string of political bulls and bullesses (the normal feminine of bull is not, I feel, available here) from the straight enphoric, propagandic charge into the less comfortable position of stopping to consider what might be the proper response to the lance or banderilla presented by the latest caller on the tele-

Sir Robin, as we shall all now remember to call him, has been accused of unnecessary rudeness, of the persistent interrup-tion. My impression after hearing him at length these last. few weeks is that he is mostly courteous and patient in a rough and ready sort of way and when he isn't, it is because there is no other way of handling those he has to deal with. Our political representatives-or at least the ones they let loose on radio and television-are not, to put it charitably, short of a word or two nor unskilled at using them to spin amazing lattice-works of fantasy; a large part of their relations with their fellow beings is conducted as a form of verbal joust and in that tradition they are inclined to sweep on until they meet an equally well equipped gentleman coming the other way.

Sir Robin is well able to provide that opposition-insist-ing that the plausible but less than complete answer be brought to a halt, restating the next four weeks. His fellow question, expanding it with conspirators do, however, strike questions of his own. And as I me as looking alarmingly young have heard him, he is evento tackle such a spectacular handed-not only between parexploit as Mr Plater's latest ties but callers as well, equally quick to suppress the importu-nate or potentially abusive Peter Davalle questioner. The Triumphont Return of the Market Theatre, Johannesburg production

Of course, some questions do not get asked - perhaps by oversight, perhaps by intention. Last Tuesday, Mrs Thatcher, asked by a caller to explain the bellicose anti-Russian sentiments expressed by her sup-porters at a youth rally, dismissed the occurance as something not to be taken seriously. She drew a comparison between this and the disrespectful things professional comedians say of politicians: they, it seems, are not to be taken seriously either. No great future for an interviewer in challenging something like that, but the listener notices and thinks: "Lady you've got to be joking ...

> It was no surprise that the two special editions of Analysis conducted by Mary Goldring proved to be among the best campaign broadcasting. Policies Before Parties was the series title and each programme took trouble to try to establish what were the grounds on which the three main parties were fighting and what their policies implied. Miss Goldring in her own headmistressly way is as effec-tive as Sir Robin at running a discussion and keeping its participants to the point.

Despite this, perhaps inevi-tably, the phrase Policies Before Parties promised more than it could deliver. In the second programme, for example, John Redwood, Dr Bernard Donog-hue and Sir Leslie Murphy, though not active politicians, were there as nursing Tory, Labour and Alliance sympathies respectively and in each the influence of sympathy on what appeared to be a rational, closely argued position was apparent and profound. It added weight to what must surely be the most persistent message of the entire election campaign, one quite certainly in total contradiction to what the senders hoped. In spite of endless argument and assertion ("Only our policies are any use"), the conclusion we come away with is that no one knows.

THE TIMES DIARY

Zooming in

There is understandable smugness at ITN over those passenger's eye shots of Margaret Thatcher in the Daimler on her way from Finchley to Conservative Central Office in the small hours yesterday. The instal-lation of the camera, a fixed focus lightweight Sony, was the result of weeks of meticulous planning by Downing Street staff and the Special Branch. Provisional times for the camera to be operated had been agreed in advance, but the detailed cueing during The Nation Decider was done by Mrs Thatcher's detective talking to Peter Heaps of ITN, who was in a link van immediately behind. The signal was then directed to a helicopter flying above, down to London Weekend Television on the South Bank, then to ITN, from there to the Telecom Tower and finally to the IBA transmitters and the nation's television sets. If you felt, as I did, that the end result somehow emphasized her pedagogical mode, this was due - but only in part - to the low siting of the Sony relative to the PM's face.

Getting the bird

Having temporarily unsirred Sir Robin, Mrs Thatcher was herself the victim of a misappellation during the TV coverage. It came from the knight's only slightly less dis-tinguished colleague, David Dimble-by, who called her Mrs Finchley. It could stick.

Polish hopes, Vatican fears

The Pope has a brisk way with critics of his eastern policy, and it is unlikely to be coincidence that the preparations for his controversial second journey to Poland beginning uext Thursday are accompanied by reports that he already has plans in mind for a third visit in 1985.

His critics vary from the Soviet news agency Tass to members of his own entourage. He himself has never shown any sign of second thoughts about visiting his homeland again. Even after the Poles were known in December to have had Russian agreement to the visit, the possibility was never out of mind at the Vatican that the Poles might find some pretext for calling it off. No such move could have been imagined coming from the Pope himself. He made no conditions and is not a man to be thwarted.

He went to Turkey in November 1979 to meet the Orthodox patriarch although the Turkish government made clear that the visit was not convenient. He went to Britain last year despite advice against the visit because of the fighting in the Falklands. Cancellation in the case of Poland would have meant much more: to accept a rebuff to the central theme of his reign, namely his policy towards the East. He frequently refers to how Poland, through all its travails of occupation, division and invasion, has retained its integrity because it remembered its Christian origins. He would equally see the West as having fallen far below the standards set by Poland in equating national feetings and cultural convictions with religious foundations. That is why he is harsher in his moral judgments on the West.

The Pope has something beside his convictions. And that is the knowledge that he has a unique and spectacular place on the international stage, in part because of his own remarkable personality and in part because there is a great lack of colourfulness and ability to con-vince among the world's leading politicians. Few popes in modern history have reached this point of popular prominence, and John Pani II is not one to waste an asset.

During the reign of the two previous popes, Monsignor Agosti-Casaroli, Vatican Secretary of State, tirelessly visited the communist countries seeking by negotiation to give the Catholic Church more breathing space, while in the minds by Peter Nichols of the Italian popes Europe meant first the West. That outlook has now gone. John Paul thinks in terms of the spiritual unity of all Christian

As negotiations for next week's visit went ahead, the Polish authorities were quietly but firmly told that they would not see in advance the texts of his percents. Probably they have been privately informed by now of their substance when replies are due, but no more, His invitation to meet him in Poland, sent to leaders of Catholic churches in other parts of Eastern Europe , including the Hungarian Cardinal Lekai, the Czechoslovak Cardinal Tomasek and the Latvian Cardinal Vaivods, underlines the broader significance which his presence in Poland must

The Pope knows that what he says in an eastern country, comparatively close to the Russian border and in the heart of the Soviet empire, will be sifted and weighed with greater care by the Russians than something he says in St Peter's Square. The first Slav Pope talking to Slavs in Slav territory, and in their own tongue can be expected to be accorded a better hearing. He particularly needs to convince Moscow of the legit-imacy of his intentions when he speaks about how Catholics should behave when faced, as in Czechoslovakia, with heavy limitations on liberty; with the problems arising from a more flexible hand in Hungary; with repression in the Baltic states. He needs this greater mutual confidence too in order to fulfil another part of his design, that of better relations with the eastern Orthodox churches of which the Russian is by far the largest.

The Poles are estimated to be more than 94 per cent Catholic, as opposed to 70 per cent in Czechoslovakia and 60 per cent in Hungary. The problem of Polish Catholics is seen to some extent to be less one of how the state treats the Church than how the church should react to the conduct of the state. Can the Vatican still, for instance, feel that General Jaruzelski has any degree of real or potential autonomy from the Russians? The Pope's presence in Poland could after all (and the Russians are understood to have had this in mind) encourage the West to be a little gentler with the regime, in such ways as debt repayments and sanctions. The Polish government would certainly like diplomatic relations with the Vatican and is expected to raise the matter, at least informally.

The Pope, when he was Cardinal-Archbishop of Crakow, was believed to share the views of the late Primate of Poland, Cardinal Wyszynski, and oppose the idea on the grounds that the Polish church would be weakened by having a papal diplomat present in Warsaw who, almost certainly, would not even be a Pole. Wyszynski was strengthed in this conviction by the late Cardinal Seper, the Yugoslav who was head of the Holy Office. Yugoslavia is the one Eastern European country which has diplomatic relations with the Holy See. The single substantial difference in Poland since the old Primate's death Poland since the old Primate's deam is that the new one is not so formidable a figure as Wyszynski. Cardinal Glemp was the late Primate's secretary, and private secretaries are supposed to take time to grow away from the shadow of their master, if they do so at all.

Should the Pope be going to Poland? Inevitably, criticisms are heard. Keepers of the memory of the great John XXIII feel that he would. not have approved, favouring as he did quiet and patient dialogue which would in the end be efficacious because it had behind it the conviction of being right as well as good. Some in the Vatican see John Paul's approach as confrontational and provocative

Questions of international political convenience for one side or the other would not be expected to enter the Pope's calculations. The general deterioration in relations between East and West might give strength to his determination to do what he intends. The second visit to Poland, like the first and the third he is said to have in mind, are bound up in the logic of the reign. This is the only answer for critics who maintain that he shows little comparable sympathy with the problems of Nicara-gua, for instance, or for the advanced western industrialized societies. What the effects in the East will be will, of course, depend much less on logic and more on the

This time oil must be made to pay

Mrs Thatcher's government has rising prices by making imports been the first to enjoy the finits of cheaper and putting pressure on Britain's North Sea oil wealth. Without the £20,000m of oil revenues flowing into Exchequer coffers over the past four years.

money that simply was not there before, she might not be celebrating her landslide. Her economic programme would almost certainly have been unworkable and its costs

If the Government had tried to pursue the same tough anti-inflation policies in the absence of oil, seconding to one recent study by the independent National Institute for Economic and Social Research, the ecession would have been twice as deep, unemployment more than a million higher, the balance of payments in huge deficit and income tax would have had to go up to 50p in the pound. Inflation would still have been higher than it is today.

The Prime Minister will not be so blessed this time. Oil revenues are expected to peak within the next year or two, at perhaps £10,000m or so a year, and then to stabilize or decline for the remainder of the decade. Instead: of an extra £20,000m from oil, Mrs Thatcher can bank on only half that sum or less over the next five years.

This places an important constraint on her room to manoeuvre in a second parliamentary term. She cannot afford a deeper recession, because the extra oil revenues will not be there to cushion its effects. That means that her passionate personal desire to force inflation down to zero, which many economists believe would lead to continued sluggish growth and mounting unemployment, may have to take second place to policies designed to sustain economic recovery.

The policies which Mrs Thatcher has pursued in the last four years nevertheless provide a good guide to what she is likely to do in her second term. By the end of the 1980s, with revenues in decline, what benefits will Britain have to show for its short-lived oil bonanza?

Everyone agrees that the principal object of government policy must be to convert the revenues now flowing from oil into investment which will go on providing income after the wells run dry.

The Conservative government argued that the best way to stimulate investment was to create the foundations for a healthy economy through reducing inflation. So it harnessed the oil revenues to its tight money and fiscal policies designed to squeeze inflation out of the system.

It used them to help cut government borrowing, claiming that this would bring down interest rates and so encourage investment in the private sector. It allowed sterling broved by oil to rise to damagingly uncompetitive levels, because this helped the fight against

The effects on investment were not those intended. Tough financial policies and the strong pound induced Britain's severest recession for 50 years. Interest rates, despite lower government borrowing re-mained at historically high levels, especially in inflation-adjusted terms, while a decimated British industry slashed production, jobs and spending on plant and equip-investment Instead. financed by Britain's oil-based balance of payments surplus flowed abroad, encouraged by the high exchange rate which made foreign assets look cheaper. Since exchange controls were abolished in 1979, about £14,000m has gone into overseas stocks and shares, and a similar sum has been invested in the foreign operations of United Kingdom businesses.

These assets will be an important source of income when the oil ceases to flow. But overseas investment, while there is little evidence to back up Labour's claims that it is positively harmful, does little to strengthen Britain's domestic economy, to improve the efficiency of industry or to create jobs for British

There was another way. Oil revenues could have been spent to boost economic activity, for instance through higher public investment and cuts in taxes.

The National Institute study, which looked at such a strategy, suggested there would still have been a recession but only a mild one. a recession but only a much one.

Instead of a drop in national output of 4 per cent the reduction would have been only 1 per cent, and unemployment would have been half a million lower. The current account would still have been modestly in surplus. But public borrowing would have been higher and so would inflation, now 4 per cent, by about 2 percentage points.

In effect then, as the study points out, the benefits of oil have been divided between a lower rate of inflation and a considerably higher standard of living for those in work. Without the oil revenues the Government could not have cut its borrowing in the face of mounting unemployment, now reckoned to be costing more than £15,000m in social security benefits and lost taxes, without an even bigger increase in the tax burden.

Whether this amounts to frittering away North Sea riches on financing the dole queues, as the Opposition charges, or the establishment of a sound economic base for sustained recovery, as the Government claims. will be revealed in Mrs Thatcher's second term. But Britain's oil opportunity, if it turns out to be wasted, will have come and gone forever.

Clive Aslet describes moves to rebuild a wibbly wobbly image

Architectural fruit salad: the Ozonia hotel at Canvey Island. Right, Blundon Shadbolt, master of the romantic revival, in his half-timbered hall studio

Let's stop mocking the neo-Tudor

Most architectural styles have had their detractors from time to time, but none has taken such a consistent critical pasting as the lyrical half-timbered mode of the 1920s and 1930s. It was Osbert Lancaster in 1930s. It was Osbert Lancaster in Home Sweet Homes, published in 1939, who coined the devastatingly scornful epithet "Stockbrokers' Tudor". He accompanied his description with a delightful drawing of a staring young lady in a four-poster bed and his "Sussex house-agent's song (traditional, early twentieth century)":

Four postes round my bed,
Oake beames overhead.

Oake beames overhead, Old rugges on ye floor.

No stockbroker could aske for more. Such a house, too, its faintly artistic pretensions ship-wrecked on the owner's unshakeably middleciass values, was Rookery Nook, scene of the eponymous Ben Travers farce. Like many a politician, the neo-Tudor style found ridicule more damaging than argument. Its reputation wilted under the wit.

But not its popularity. While the progressive, flat-roofed style of the Modern Movement, a favourite with the press, was largely confined to a circle of left-wing dons, neo-Tudor was built everywhere for all sorts of people - usually people who never gave much attention to architecture. Think of Weybridge, think of the arterial roads. Think, and perhaps shudder. The worst was very bad, especially when paper-thin, applied beams were combined with very un-Tudor steelframed windows. On the other hand, the best was, sometimes in a bizarre way, remarkable. Recently there have been signs that it is undergoing critical reappraisal.

Neasden is in the forefront of the movement. There, at the Grange Museum, an exhibition was mounted last year on the hitherto obscure architect Ernest George Trobridge, showed a large number of buildings, for the most part in the north London suburbs. Trobridge's brand of neo-Tudor was highly individual. Though his houses are generally small, every kind of gable, window and chimney, every variety of tilehanging weatherboarding and brick-work, was packed together in the same house. The result is an architectural fruit salad, a little Trobridge was also, in his way, an nnovator. As a solution to the post-First World War housing problem, he proposed a system of building with newly felled elm (difficult to work when seasoned) called "the compressed greenwood construc-tion", which he had certificated by the Ministry of Health. It was not widely used. Trobridge's efforts to build for the working classes only succeeded with a seaside hotel on Canvey Island, Essex, called Ozonia. It was full of holiday fun, such as a bedroom decorated like a monk's cell with demons peering inside. Of the two lounges, one was done up as an aquarium, the other filled with edition of the Thirties Society Journal, published this week, comes a fully researched, scholarly article on Blundon Shadbolt. Like the Trobridge exhibition, it asks to be taken with dead-pan seriousness. Shadbolt was not content with borrowing motifs from past styles; like a number of architects, includ-ing well-known ones like Baillie Scott, he sought to capture the very look and feel of old work in his new buildings, to the extent of re-using genuinely ancient materials. Great vigilance was necessary to stop the builder using - as builders will - a plumb-line in constructing dwelling that had been settling and sagging for centuries. Usually the district surveyor washed his hands of it. At least one Shadbolt house, of R. Ar least one Shadbolt house, Smugglers' Way in Hampshire, was so uncomfortable that the owners moved out to a more frankly modern one after a few years.

Shadbolt died in 1949, having been knocked off his bicycle in Redhill Duncan Campbell, author of the article in the Thirtier Society Journal, has unearthed a photograph of the architect in his studio in It shows a balding scholarly looking man, seated at a paper-strewn, worm-eaten table, surrounded by agreeable antiques. The room, designed by himself, is in the form of a half-timbered hall; on the wall hangs the photograph of another half-timbered hall. But if all this suggests an extreme case of backward-looking romanticism, it is not quite accurate.

What is now emerging as the Bible of the wibbly wobbly style, P. A. Barron's The House Desirable of 1928, shows that neo-Tudor was seen as relevant to an up-to-date way of life. Barron wrote the book after a series of wanderings by car through the Home Counties. In fact, he saw the countryside very much with the motorist's eye, and his impressions may have been blurred

By deliberately losing his way, he found he continually came across new, old-looking houses - Ellens, at Rudgwick; Normandy, at Worthing; Tudor Close, at Rottingdean. In his view, the "wealthy women of today" did not desire a palace, but a service flat in W1 and a not-too-large house in the country, old but modernized, and within easy reach of London by car. "Her charming home she will describe, wery modestly, as her

'cottage', for there is something lovable about the term." There will still be those who see neo-Tudor only as a joke. But as architectural jokes go, it is not a bad one. And a lot of mileage is left in it. Historians will surely blow the cobwebs off more quainty named figures, hardly known to the million even within their own lifetimes, who helped the upper middle classes realize their latent romanticism.

Moreover, this way of building reflected an idealized image of England that was close to the hearts of a large number of people. Old buildings that seemed to have maured for centuries, gently and uninterpretately, at the end of uninterruptedly, at the end of country lanes perhaps took on a special attractiveness after the mechanized destruction of the First World War. They suggested another aspect of the countryside, along with folk songs, country dancing and the rural crafts that was fast disappearing. The architect Ian Naira (one of the few to think neo-Tudor worth so much as a chuckle in the 1960s), summed this up when he called Crowburst Place in Surrey "a rhapsody on Ightham Mote".

The challenge for our age is how to protect them. Whatever one may think of these buildings as archite-cure, they are certainly works of individuality. Because their essence lies in the high degree of detailing and the painstaking building methods, they are especially valuerable to insensitive modernization. Double-glazing, of the kind that replaces leaded lights with standard, aluminium-framed windows, is a particular danger.

Almost no neo-Tudor building is listed. Yet perhaps the greatest testimony to the merit of such houses is that so many do still survive and are looked after with loving care. Evidently the domestic vision they realized had a strong appeal from the start.

The reality behind Thatcher's rhetoric

When historians look back upon the election of 1983, how important will it seem? Most elections matter simply for the choice as to who will govern the country over the next few years. This time the electorate's verdict is bound to have its effect, one way or the other, on the whole structure of British party politics. I suspect that this election may have a more lasting impact in this second respect than is now appreciated, and rather less in the first respect than is generally supposed.

I do not mean by this that it will really make little difference who was elected. Had Labour been given office there would have been some fundamental changes in national policy. A Labour government would have had to make at least some move towards taking Britain out of the EEC; it would have refused to allow cruise missiles to be deployed on British territory; it would have nationalized further large sections of industry; and it would have pursued an inflationary economic policy.

That Mrs Thatcher's second administration will not do any of these things is very important. But on present evidence it will not be such a radical government as many people expect. The Conservatives rought on a cautious manifesto, and they managed to collect a few more commitments to caution as the ampaign progressed.

They will transfer some more industries, or sections of industries, from the public to the private sector. They will continue the process of trade union reform. But they will not be able to cut public expenditure significantly as a deliberate act of policy - as distinct from a response to an unforeseen crisis - without exposing themselves to the charge of baving misted the electorate.

Ministers conspicuously declined every opportunity to warn even in the most general terms that spending would have to be reduced in the lifetime of the next Parliament The impression of radicalism has been maintained through Mrs Thatcher's personality. What this suggests is that the Conservatives have won reelection with a wet programme in the hands of a dry Prime Minister. There is an oldfashioned ring to this it sounds like the modern equivalent of Disraeli's idea of a sound Conservative government. Tory men and Whig

It is not only Mrs Thatcher's programme that is cautious. So is Mrs Thatcher. She has radical instincts - but her actions are usually less daring than the ideas she is prepared to contemplate. There are two further reasons why this seems likely to remain true in proposals have been worked out to give effect to her radical instincts, and nobody can legislate by instinct overcome if Mrs Thatcher were to organize the Government so as to give it a decidedly radical thrust. That would be more daring than it sounds. It would mean dropping from the Cabinet powerful figures who would soon become a focus of backbench dissidence. For a Prime Minister with a large overall majority, who must be forced by the laws of arithmetic to leave out of her Government a good many MPs of talent and ambition, that would be taking a big risk. It would be surprising if Mrs Thatcher did not balance of opinoin.

If the election may not pave the way for dramatic policy changes, it has placed a large question mark against the familiar pattern of party politics in Britain. Labour have suffered a devastating setback. Though they have won many more seats than the Alliance, they have attracted a lower percentage of the total vote than in any general election since 1918.

The decline of their mass appeal indicates the severity of the warning that has been served on Labour: the voters will not accept a party that conducts its affairs, chooses its programme and selects its leader with more concern for its own members than the electorate at large. Because they will have more seats than the Alliance in the new Parliament, Labour still have the first option on the role of the serious opposition - as distinct from the unquestioned right to be the official opposition. But if they are to take up that option, they will have to show they are again capable of looking

· If Labour fail, the Alliance could find themselves providing the serious opposition to the Government by the next election. The handicap of so few seats will make it harder both to make their presence felt in Parliament and to hold the Alliance together. But they have shown that they can win votes in large numbers at a general election as well as in by-elections.

This means the political atmosphere could be transformed if the Alliance started to win by elections and run comfortably ahead of Labour in opinion polls. Their success could no longer be dismissed as a mid-term aberration. But whatever happens, present pattern of parliamentary opposition cannot continue indefinitely. Either Labour will have to reform, or the Alliance

SHE HAS BROKEN THE MOULD

The mould has been broken in Britain this week, though it may not have been broken in the way that the original Gang of Four intended. It was one of their chief complaints that Britain suffered from the swing of a political pendulum which meant that each government tended to dismantle the policies of its competitor and predecessor. We now have the prospect of another five years of Conservative government, giving an unbroken stretch of nine years. In those circumstances the complaint about a penduluminduced impotence becomes irrelevant

The magnititude of yesterday's victory by the Conservatives has closed the book on two generations of political argument. The mould which had to be broken was not in fact the two party system, which has actually been quite porous to change over the years. The mould was the post-war model of economic and social thinking. It was cast in concrete by the Attlee government, not unnaturally in the light of the circumstances of the time, but this meant that its foundations were never shaken by any serious political challenge until the coming of Mrs Thatcher's government.

The irony of today's agenda which confronts the government is that it shows that we are all social democrats now, provided that term can be allowed its general meaning and not be highjacked by particular politicians keen to distance themselves from the socialist ethic of their recent past. As Arthur Seldon explains in a recent I.E.A. pamphler

The term 'social democracy' can he understood in several senses. For economists, interest lies in its expression of a desire to combine the strengths of four elements in evolving the good society: first, the decentralized market, with all it implies in local, voluntary or mutual co-operation in private activity and enterprise; second profit as the reward of entrepreneurship; third, pricing of the method of rationing scarce resources between alternative uses; and, not least, fourth the 'social justice' of common access to the means of civilized living."

The Government now has a chance to hasten forward with detailed policies to bring about a social market economy and a set of attitudes which are so concisely listed above. The size of yesterday's majority, however, will not make that task any easier, except in so far as it shows that the rather patchy efforts of the last four years have received a much firmer endorsement than either of the other two programmes set before the voters.

But the well-being generated by an electoral victory should not be used as the cover under which to press for relaxations which would only spoil what has been achieved and negate the chance of further improvement. In this context, calls for magnanimity in victory should be confined to a courteous lack of interest in the internal travails of the Labour Party, and a readiness to argue the merits of Alliance proposals. They should certainly not be allowed in as code words for qualified measures of re-inflation.

The government's primary function will remain the conquest of inflation. With a further reduction a period of price stability would provide much more fruitful conditions for reliable economic expansion than any amount of ministerial spending. Beyond that the government should waste no time in dismantling those restrictions on economic activity in the field of taxation, employment policies, small businesses, wages councils, housing mobility and the hard crust of public monopoly, all of which inhibit growth and enterprise.

The welfare argument can get the better of you.

now be tackled on its merits rather than in terms of hysterical charge and countercharge about its very existence. The goals of welfare are not in dispute: we all want access to it. The argument is about means. If the welfare state is inefficient - and it most certainly is - any government should explore how the market system can be brought in to make it more efficient for the same results.

The other major change which may now occur, and which the Government should exploit, is the way in which the public tackles the question of unemployment. Surely this election victory has shown that the tired attempts to invest the phenomenom of unemployment with some statistical morality have not taken in the electors, since more that one third of those affected by unemployment apparently voted for the Conservatives. Nevertheless, statistical unemployment is here to stay. It is necessary, therefore, to discover a different language in which to explore the profound changes which will effect the whole pattern of work in society in the 1980s and 1990s. That has been a ministerial shortcoming - from the Prime Minister downwards all apprehensive about admitting that the long term economic projections contain no obvious sign of a return to an employment level below what used to be wrongly regarded as "politically unacceptable". As inflation has risen, that political plimsoll line has risen with it.

There is still more than a five year agenda here; and the next five will be no less hard than the last four. So there is no time to relax from the overriding task to roll back the state. Mrs Thatcher has been Prime Minister long enough now to know that if you do not first and always get the better of the bureaucracy, it will

DISPROPORTIONAL REPRESENTATION

The paramount requirement of any electoral system is validation of the exercise of political power. Power (these days) comes (in theory) from the people. The mechanism of its transmission from its source to its point of discharge in the governing apparatus is the mechanism of election. Unless that mechanism is widely acknowledged to be free from corruption and abuse, to be suitably frequent, and to have recognizable correspondence between voting preferences recorded in the ballot and the party complexion of the body elected, validation will be uncertain. And without unquestionable validity or legitimation a political system is less able to resolve conflict and adjust competing claims by constitutional means, less able to sustain government by consent. especially when the going gets

This time the British system of first-past-the-post election to single-member constituencies is more than ever out of kilter. PARTY WITHOUT A PRINCE

Labour have emerged from the election to face a crisis at least as great as any in their history. It is partly a crisis of leadership, partly of policies, but above all of attitude. The question is simply whether they as a party are prepared to come to terms with the electorate, or whether they are going to continue to demand that the electorate must come to terms with them. If they are not willing to take proper account of the wishes of the voters, then there will be no future for Labour as one of the two major parties.

The first task must be to replace Mr Foot with a leader whose appeal will not be confined to the party faithful. The effective choice seems likely to be limited to Mr Shore, Mr Hattersley and Mr Kinnock. Mr. Benn is unlikely to be back in the House of Commons in time to be eligible to stand, and Mr Healey suffers from the twin handicaps of having damaged his reputation in the campaign and of being too old at nearly 66 to begin a long stint in oppo-completely new generation: as he judged as they campaign for is now in his sixtleth year, his election would appear to be moving on no more than half a generation.

Mr Hattersley probably has rather less support than Mr Kinnock among either the trade unions or the constituency parties - though it is difficult as yet to assess the effect that their respective campaign perform-ances will have had. One would guess, though, that Mr Hattersley would have the edge in the new parliamentary party.

Mr Kinnock has much charm and wit; but his weakness is that. like Mr Foot, he gives the impression of being too much a rhetorician in politics. He has no experience of office, which makes it more difficult for him both to exercise a practical judgment and to speak with authority. After years in oppo-sition, it will be critical for Labour at the next election to convince the electorate that they would know how to run the country. But these are early days. Rather than spending too much time upon assessing the odds, or even upon considering at this stage who would be the best if he is not to seek his own the party's urge to move on to a which the candidates should be office. The essential test is whether they would be prepared to take the risks that the next Labour leader must face if he is to turn the party towards the electorate rather than inward upon itself. This means discarding dogma and fighting extremism. The country will not be impressed by a party that remains wedded to unilateral nuclear disarmament which became Labour's most severe policy liability during the election campaign - to with-drawal from the European Community, to extending public ownership on doctrinal grounds and to an extensive spending programme without proper regard to its cost. It might seem self-evident in the light of the election results that these policies should be jettisoned. But to do so would provoke conflict within the party. Yet there is no way that conflict can be avoided if Labour are to make themselves acceptable once again to majority opinion in this country. Mr Foot was chosen to unite the party at all costs. That strategy has not worked, and the next leader will have to broaden his perspective

Sir. Two items in your election-eve issue of .The Times make one wonder whether George Orwell's predictions were set just a decade too early.

Aims of Industry, claiming to be acting in support of free enterprise, spend money presumably from this source on an advertisement devoted entirely to attacking the Alliance.

More importantly, your much respected columnist, Geoffrey Smith, in making the timely point that the Alliance must not allow its chagrin with the present electoral system to divert it from its primary aim of developing as an alternative credible government, predicts that there is no prospect of a Thatcher government with a substantial majority introducing electoral re-

Have we really to conclude that the Prime Minister and private industry are united in preferring the prospect of the election in perhaps 1988 of a Marxist Labour government on a minority vote to the prospect of electoral reform? If so, there is sadly seemingly little long-term hope for freedom in Britain. Surely it is self-evident that in these difficult times, with a volatile electorate, there is no prospect of one party maintaining power indefi-nitely by the democratic process, even if this were desirable. There is at least a considerable prospect of the next election producing a government pledged to carrying out irreversible changes our structures on the mandate of a minority vote of perhaps not much greater than a third of those cast. If this should happen it would appear that the responsibility would lie firmly on the shoulders of the Prime Minister, supported by private industry.

Our hope must be that both are sufficiently realistic and far-sighted to ensure that such a catastrophe is avoided by the only certain means

From the President-Bishop and Bishop in Iran Sir, I refer to the letter in your issue

Discovering America From Professor O. A. W. Dilke

Sir, The naming of America, of which two unorthodox theories are given in today's issue (Philip Howard, June 7) is in fact well enough documented. It was named after Amerigo Vespucci in the first place in the editio princeps of Cosmographiae Introductio (1507), in which a sentence of the Latin may be rendered: "Since that part of the world has been explored by Americus Vesputius, I do not see why it should not be called 'Amerige', as if 'land (ge) of Americus', or 'America'''.

This Introductio has been shown to be connected with Martin Waldseemüller's cartography, and he is indeed the first to put the name America on a map, also of that year; but the wording of the text was probably due to his associate, the Alsatian humanist and poet Matthias Ringmann, as shown by Franz Laubenberger in Erdkunde for September, 1959. Yours etc.

O. A. W. DILKE. The University of Leeds, School of Classics, Leeds.

Waterloo wasteland From the Reverend T. J. Russ

Sir, The real solution to the Waterloo wasteland (letter, June 7) is to terminate trains at Waterloo, not bring them across the river to Charing Cross. This would then release the whole of Hungerford Bridge to be used for pedestrians. and the South Bank could begin on the North Bank.

Moving pavements could transport us across the Thames to the South Bank arts centre in comfort, sheltered from the wind by a Perspex or glass cover. British Rail could then solve its financial problems by selling Charing Cross

Yours faithfully, T. J RUSS. 49 St Thomas' House, East Arbour Street. El.

Last resort

From the Chief Executive of North

Devon District Council Sir, I refer to a letter from the Reverend John Ticeburst (June 8) concerning an advertisement alleg-edly published by my council concerning a nuclear air-raid shelter.

I would like to make it clear that North Devon District Council has no nuclear air-raid shelter and that there is no proposal to build one. The advertisement was neither inserted not authorised by my ගඟයාී.

electoral system that ensures a Parliament fairly representing the will of all the people.

Yours faithfully, RICHARD S. ROWNTREE. Kingthorpe, Pickering, North Yorkshire,

From the Director of Aims of Industry

Sir, Scandinavian non-socialists will be wry if they read the letter from Lord Harlech and others (June 9) arguing (presumably) for proportional representation.

In Scandinavian countries it has produced socialist governments who implement socialism, or highly fragmented coalition governments consisting of farmers, conservatives and liberals. When they have achieved government they have been absolutely unable to turn back from socialism.

If we had had proportional representation in this country, I very much doubt if we would have had a Thatcher government attempting to undo the socialism and corporatism imposed since the war. Yours faithfully, MICHAEL IVENS, Director, Aims of Industry, 40 Doughty Street, WC1.

From Dr J. A. Butterworth Sir, I wonder if there is a single reader who believes that The Times would be dismissing PR (proportional representation) so disdainfully if, as our present electoral system allows, Labour were about to obtain a workable majority for its current manifesto with the support of less than 40 per cent of the lectorate.

Yours faithfully. JOHN A. BUTTERWORTH. 18 College Lane, NW5.

'No woman is required to change her religion or nationality to marry a Muslim ..."

When Persian papers last autumn published the new code of law for crime and punishment to replace the old civil code, there also appeared two judicial decrees about intermarriage between Muslims and non-Muslims which might interest your readers. The question was asked of the religious judicial authorities about marriage of Muslim women with non-Muslims and this answer was given:

A Muslim waman is not permitted to marry with a non-Muslim under any circumstances, whether the man is a Jew. a Christian, or an apostate, neither permanent marriage nor temporary. A Muslim man can only marry in a temporary way with a Jewish or a Christian woman, but not permanently. Yours faithfully, H. B. DEHQANI-TAFTI, President-Bishop and Bishop in Iran, c/o 14 GL Peter Street, SW1. of June 3, in which the writer stated: June 6.

Rampant rape

From Dr M. Bell Sir, Your letter from Alan Mattingly, of the Ramblers Association (June 6), follows a tendency within that organisation to expect a countryside built round its prejudices.

This week it is the turn of oilseed rape to be deprecated. The RA always proclaims its allegiance to the Country Code. The first rule is, Enjoy the countryside and respect its life and work". Yet the RA will not take and enjoy the living, working countryside. Over recent times Mr Mattingly has bellyached about bulls, bridled over barley, rankled about rams, whinged about walls and cribbed at cattle grids.

Oilseed rape is not a Jack and the Beanstalk crop. The simple truth is that many of the astounding 120,000 miles of public path are hardly if ever used. If they were there would be no problem. If Mr Mattingly goes out now to hay or silage fields where no one has walked he will find some waist-high green stuff, as there has been time out of mind. Is this next, groaning about grass?

If you want pristine lawns and walks. Mr Mattingly, the public parks are there. If you want welltrodden ways follow the denuded boot-scarred Pennine Way. If you want the living, fascinating country-side come by all means; but respect Yours faithfully, MALCOLM BELL, The National Farmers' Union, Agriculture House, Knightsbridge, SW1.

People's choice

From Mrs Joan M. Bagley Sir, The Greenlandic people whom I met in the extreme south of the country do not call themselves 'Inuit" (letter, June 7). Their own name for themselves is "Katladlit", which also means "the people".

One man there who spoke excellent English as well as Danish told me that he would even prefer to be called a Greenlander to an Eskimo. Yours sincerely,

JOAN M. BAGLEY, Catel House. Les Rohais de Haut, St Andrew, Guernsey, CI.

Saving parish records

From Mr Cecil Farthing

61 Egerton Gardens, SW3.

Sir, Commander Knocker's suggestion (June 6) that parish registers should be copied by hand by enthusiastic parishioners seems out of date in these days of ubiquitous copying machines which would do the job quickly, at a very moderate expense, and, above all, infinitely more accurately than the most painstaking amateur. Yours faithfully, CECIL FARTHING.

Keeping a finger on the safety catch

Sir, John Barry (Spectrum, June 2) is right to see that what is happening in the Geneva negotiations is the codification of the relationship between "the signatories" (i.e., potential signatories). But another codification is also in progress: that between the United States and its Nato allies, particularly Britain. Mr Thatcher has accepted on our behalf that only Mr Reagan (or whoever he may choose to delegate the job to) will physically control the cruise missiles if they have to be deployed here. She claims to have a "veto" within the decision-making process: but that is no substitute for a finger on the safety catch.

She was staunch about United States extra-territorial claims in matters of trade, But it is understood in Washington that she asked Mr Reagan for a dual-key arrangement, and that this was refused.

She had a duty to require it, and in accepting a refusal she shows herself content with a reduction in British sovereignty.

If United States weapons are deployed here under sole United States physical control, United States/United Kingdom relations wil be codified in a form most of her Majesty's subjects strongly deplore. Yours etc. ELIZABETH YOUNG, 100 Bayswater Road, W2.

From Air Vice-Marshal S. W. B. Menaul

Sir. As one who had some responsibility for the operation of Thor nuclear ballistic missiles deployed in Britain between 1958 and 1963, may I correct a wrong impression contained in Lord Kennet's letter (June 3).

Thor missiles, including their nuclear warheads, were entirely American, but were maintained, serviced and operated solely by Royal Air Force crews. not United States personnel, as an integral part of RAF Bomber Command and the V-bomber force, which was Britain's truly independent strategic nuclear deterrent force at that time.

To conform to United States law governing the custody of nuclear warbeads, it was necessary to have United States Air Force officers equipped with dual keys assigned to each. Thor unit to ensure that nuclear armed missiles could not be activated without United States authority.

Prime Minister Macmillan did not insist on a dual key for Thor missiles; rather it was a necessity to ensure the custody of American nuclear warbeads. In the event, dual-key control, so far as operational procedures were concerned. was not really necessary, since neither the British servicemen who operated the missiles nor United States personnel who had custody of the warheads could activate the missiles without authority from London and Washington. Such authority was transmitted through Headquarters Bomber Command and Headquarters 7th Air Division based in the United Kingdom. The same joint decision-making procedure will be perfectly satisfactory for the operational control of cruise missiles deployed in Britain. In my book, Countdown Britain's Strategic Nuclear Forces, I describe in detail the acquisition. maintenance and operation of the Thor missile by RAF Bomber Command for nearly five years during which there were no prob-lems either in control or operation of the missiles. Yours faithfully. STEWART MENAUL, The Lodge, Frensham Vale, Lower Bourne. Farnham, Surrey. June 3.

From Air Commedore A. C. L. Mackie

'Sir, Marshal of the RAF Sir William Dickson assures us (June 2) that we can rely on the Americans to honour the gentleman's agreement about the use of British bases for launching a nuclear war.

If Anglo-US consultation is thus to be relied upon as an element in our nuclear strategy, why do we bother with an independent deterrent whose sole surviving justifi-cation is that the Americans might leave us in the nuclear lurch? Yours faithfully,

ALASTAIR MACKIE, 4 Warwick Drive, SW15.

Fire in the air

From Captain Eric Pritchard Sir. The in-flight fire that occurred to the Air Canada DC9 (report, June 4) is but another example of the rapidity with which fires spread in aircraft fuselages. There is nothing new in this; the problem of on-board fires and the rapidity with which they spread are well known to all the aviation safety organizations and other bodies outside the industy.

The European Parliament in November, 1981, published a working document which calls for the use of new materials ro replace polyurethane foam, which is presently widely used, even though it is liable to rapidly give off toxic fumes and smoke in the event of fire. During the discussions at the seventh World Airports Conference, recently concluded in London, it became apparent that aircraft currently under construction incorporate materials for cabin insulation, decoration and upholstery which are identical with those used

It is well known that these materials produce dense smoke and toxic fumes when exposed to postaccident fire situations, impeding the evacuation of the aircraft and claiming many lives through exposure to irrespirable atmospheres. improved materials are available.

including "blocking layers" in seating units, which extend evacuation times by 50 per cent by preventing or deferring the involvement of polyurethane foam elements in cushions. It should be recognized that 39

survivable aircraft accident are attributable to fire. This statistic will not be improved unless the aircraft industry and airline operating companies are compelled, by inter-nationally-agreed airworthiness specifications, to adopt cabin materials with improved fire-exposure

From the Reverend Robert Pitt Sir, Today I saw an old tramp fall over and badly gash his head. He fell in the path of the traffic on the Charing Cross Road. Not one motorist stopped and no fewer than six went to great trouble to drive around him. Some of us dragged him to the pavement with his head bleeding badly and took care of him while others went to feach the police.

Two young police officers arrived and it is about their behaviour that I am writing.

The old man was filthy; they handled him with gentle care and concern. He told them his name his first name - but they asked for his surname, which he gave. They then proceeded to comfort him always calling him "Mr" and treating him with that respect of the young for the elderly which I thought was dead.

The man's wound would not stop bleeding and there was not a single clean handkerchief among us. One of the officers took off his tie and held it to the old man's head to staunch the flow of blood.

These two young men are a credit to the Metropolitan Police, to London and, indeed, to humankind. Yours sincerely. ROBERT PITT. Goddington House, Court Road. Orpington,

On April 3, 1959, three young people and I were walking the tops of West Monar forest in Ross-shire. It was an exhibitanting day for the hills, with snow on the tops and hailstorms driven across the sky by a strong westerly gale, leaving crystalclear visibility between the storms.

We walked from Sgurr a' Chaoruinn to Bidean an Eoin Deirg. From the latter top we could see the Moray Firth to the east and Loch Carron to the west, Yours faithfully, JOHN HAMILTON, Chapel Barn, Abbotsbury,

Volcanoes and weather From Miss Joyce Linfoot

Sir, Dr and Mrs Ward (June 3) would find much to interest them in an article published in the Scientific American in June, 1979, entitled The year without a summer."

The article describes the summer of 1816, which in New England. Canada and the north-west of Europe was miserably cold. This unseasonable weather is attributed by the authors to the eruption of Mt Tambora, in Indonesia, which threw an immense amount of fine dust into the atmosphere, the height of the mountain being reduced by some 4,200 ft.

In New England there were frosts in June and July and again at the end of August. Maize crops failed over a wide area, and the price of wheat rose from $1.30 to $2.45 a bushel.

There were corresponding price rises in England and France. have been generally attributed to the dislocation caused by the Napoleonic wars. It seems that at the time no one saw any connection with the cruption although 30 years earlier Benjamin Franklin had speculated on the meteorological effects of atmospheric dust.

Yours truly. JOYCE LINFOOT. Lucy Cavendish College, Cambridge.

Relevance of poetry

From Professor Peter Clemoes Sir. Perish the thought that Anglo-Saxon poetry became a point of comparison in the Duke of Edinburgh's advocacy of a degree course in military science (report, June 3) because he regards it as a quaint eccentric among academic disciplines.

Dealing, as it does, with man's need to call on generosity of spirit, mental and physical courage, initiative, steadfastness, good sense and self-control in thought, word and deed, this poetry presents an impressive view of human integrity and of the individual's struggle to make it prevail in his relations with God, his environment, his fellow men and his own make-up, especially in testing times of war. At the heart of English traditions of personal character, Anglo-Saxon poetry. I submit, is in essentials as relevant today as it has ever been. Yours faithfully. PETER CLEMOES.

But "synthesis" suggests the spirit. But "synthesis" suggests the bringing together of concepts or disciplines of nearly equal significance and this was not Teilhard's purpose. For him there was one centre and focus of all inquiry: man. The title of his great book, The Phenomenon of Man. was carefully chosen. To the observer, that part of the universe which is accessible to scientific investigation presents a unique phenomenon, that of Man.

11-17 JUNE 1983 A WEEKLY GUIDE TO LEISURE, ENTERTAINMENT AND THE ARTS

After weeks of political gamesmanship, we look at more gentlemanly ways of knocking opponents out of court. In the third of a series on seasonal activities, Basil Boothroyd joins the smart set and two British internationals give a blow by blow account of the state and rules of croquet

Hoop

There is a class thing about owning a croquet-set. Croquetet children grow up in gardens "laid to lawn", as the estate agents say. On line summer evenings the lawn is laid to exoquet, and the children, when the serious adult contestants have withdrawn, can play their private variations. Bowling for the dog. Long shots with golf strokes into the fish-pond.

Or hoop-bashing. First to bash most boops to lawn level with a mallet gets let off boxing with a mallet gets let off boxing the gear and stowing the box in the summerhouse. None of this would go down well with the serious adults, especially if parents. Even less so with tournament officials at Hurlingham, Cheltenham, Roehampton, and serious places like that. Both my wife and I were disadvantaged children in terms of croouri-set owning. We were of croquet-set owning. We were not ashamed of this Just aware. What with the war, and a succession of flats laid to window-box, if that, we continued decreased for years until tinued deprived for years, until we got a house with grass.

"Must sell", said the local paper, soon after that "Croquet set as new." My wife thought it was sad. Someone come down in the world, seemed all right. Bit of fraying croquet sets rank as heirlooms on the business end of the mallets. Cracked winning-post. come down in the world. Croquet sets rank as heirlooms mentioned in wills, like the Royal Worcester, and grandpa's George II shaving stand.

The advertiser, in the next village, had a small terrace house laid to vegetables, even in front and suggested nothing of a man parting with family treasures to quieten the Inland Revenue. The box was in the hall. He asked £2. We were croquet-set owners. My wife still felt a pang, "Must sell." Sad. However, as the ad continued under For Sale and Wanted every week after that, she stopped grieving. The advertiser was in the Croquet-Sci-As-New business.

His as new was certainly a brave try. We didn't know much about croquet. I am told it has more laws than cricket. But we knew the balls, painted as new, were not supposed to be stuck together like a diagram of the atom. Unstuck, they proved to include an invisually lightweight blue, with patches of yellow and red. It went plink instead of thwack when struck, traveling base distances. We travelling huge distances. We thought it was probably a ballcock, but did not want to scratch any more paint off to check. The rest of the stuff

Still, our lawn did not conform to Rochampton standards either. About half-size, failing of the rectangular, and with deceptive gradients. Fun, though. You could do tricks with a raised buttercup root that would have made the Croquet Association's hair curl.
Our mistake – well, not really, as things turned out.

because we enjoyed it in the end

- let us say we perhaps should not have boasted about being croqueteers at the British Legion wine-and-cheese. But you know how the talk flags. It was had luck that we disclosed our newly boosted stains to the Wells-Wellerbys, who took croquet very seriously. Took everything very seriously. She took the conservation of rare tropical finches very seriously. He took irrigation in the Sudan They both took their croquetset, which had come down from one of their ancestors, who had either invented the game, or told the inventor how to play it. Once we had got them on it we could not get them off it. They had not themselves got a croquet lawn, "Oh, we have" wife said Mrs Wells-Wellerby looked shocked. Mr Wells-Wellerby explained that they, of course, had a croquet

Croquet is 130 years old and thriving. Not since its Edwardian hey-day has the game enjoyed such popularity. Britain are the reigning world champels and this international supremacy is rooted in a flourishing network of more than 100 clubs and 80 tourna-ments. Support at the real grass roots is even more remarkable; it is estimated that 100,000 garden sets are sold every year.

But twice, croquet has nearly died. Following the arrival of lawn tennis in 1883 it virtually disappeared until the formation of the Croquet Association in 1896 then after the last war when it became principally the preserve of the retired. This time it was rejuvenated by

The origins of the game are pleasantly misted according to a croquet historian. A form of croquet was certainly played in Ireland, arriving in England about 1850 where it was organized in the late 1860s. The Parkstone and Budieigh and in the London area at Rochampton, Harrow and Woking. Colchester, Bristol and Bath all have thriving clubs, but it is in the Midlands and the North in the last few years, the Federation of Northern Clubs and the Federation of West Midlands Clubs have been founded. Edgbaston, Notting-ham, Bowden (South Manchester) and Southport are the leading clubs in their areas. In Scotland there are seven registered clubs.

Annual subscriptions at clubs vary but between £20 to £60 is usual, depending upon the facilities. Most clubs will initially lend players a mallet and provide some coaching. But most players will soon want their own mallet and these range in price from £30 to £60. For tournament play, whites are worn with flat-soled shoes. For those wishing to improve their enjoyment of garden croquet, here are two suggestions. First, play to the Association Croquet rules though not necessarily on a fullsize lawn - as they are more interesting. Second, find out what a four-ball break is and learn to play it. If you do this you will be unbeatable until your opponent also finds out. Then the fun really begins!

HOW TO PLAY

Right order is everything as you roquet and croquet to the winning post

The croquet court Association Croquet is played on a lawn five units long by four units wide. In tournaments each unit is seven yards. The game can be played perfectly well on a smaller court by simply reducing. the units as required. The game is played between two sides using four coloured balls; each side can consist of one or two players. (singles or doubles). One side playswith the blue and black balls, the other with the red and yellow. At the start of a game the sides toss a coin to decide who plays first and who has which balls. In doubles each player must also choose which ball he or she will play with throughout the game. Play is made by striking the ball with a mallet.

The object of the game Each side tries to make both his balls go through all the hoops in the correct order and then hit the winning post ("peg") first. .

The hoops There are six hoops on the court but in the full game a ball has to go through each hoop twice, once in each direction. It scores a point for running each hoop and for hitting the peg; a total of 13 points. Thus the winning side will score 26 points. The order of the hoops is 1 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 1-back, 2-back, 3-back, 4-back, penultimate, rover (see diagram). Clips coloured to match the balls are placed on the appropriate hoops to indicate which hoop each ball has to run next. It is not necessary to play the full game. The 14-point game moops 1 to 6 and the peg) is very popular.

The horn.
The sides take alternate turns. At tive start of a turn either ball of 2 . side may be played - the balls do not have to be played in sequence - and the ball that is played is then called the striker's ball. A turn consists initially of only one stroke but it can be extended by either running the next hoop for the: striker's ball (one extra stroke) or hitting any other ball with the striker's ball - called "making a contact with the ball it hit - now called the croqueted ball. In the first extra stroke, the croquet stroke, the striker's ball is hit so that both balls move. You are not allowed to put a foot on either ball or to send either ball off the court (in each case your han would end):

The second extra stroke is called the continuation stroke. This is an ordinary stroke which is normally used to make another roquet or to run the next hoop.
You can roquet and croquet each of the other three balls on the court only once in a turn unless you run. the next hoop. Then you get an extra stroke (see above) and the right to roquet and croquet the If a ball (other than the striker's ball) is sent off the court it must be replaced on the yard-line (see diagram) opposite the spot where it went off. The yard-line is not normally marked out and the yard is measured with the help of the player's mallet. The baulk-lines are the portions of the yard-line from which the balls may be played into the game at the start and when a "Rt-shot" is awarded.

If a player finds at the start of his turn that the other side has placed his ball in such a position that it has no clear shot at any other ball, he is said to be "wired" (snockered) and THE CROQUET COURT

Sid 35 yards boundary 315 yards yards yards े3% प्रसार is entitled to a lift-shot. He may then take his ball to either baulk

Eas and play it from there. The break Your intention should be to score saveral points in one turn - to make a break. Suppose you are playing blue which is for hoop 1. You migh start by roqueting a ball (say, red), using the croquet stroke you have earned to send it somewhere useful (eg near hoop 2, the next hoop but one for bise) and bise . within range of another ball (say, black, your partner ball). Then, in the continuation stroke, you can requet black and earn another two strokes. You might use the croquet stroke to put black near the peg (a generally useful position in a break) and blue towards the possible to hoop 1, and earn yet another two strokes. in the croquet stroke that follows you would send yellow a little way beyond hoop 1 and blue right in : front of the hoop. Then, in the continuation stroke, you can run hoop 1 with blue, earn one extra stroke and the right to use all the remaining ball, yellow. In the continuation stroke you can requet yellow, hopefully as near as.

By requeting yellow, croqueting it to hoop 3 (now the next hoop but one for bkue) and travelling up to red (waiting conveniently at hoop 2) via black at the peg, you can run hoop 2 as well indeed, by this stepping sione sequence of placing the other three balls in useful positions with the croquet strokes, known as the four-ball break, it is quite possible to run as many hoops as you like in one turn.

This week we begin a new, monthly series of articles to take you effortlessly through the tricky world of travel and set you down, financially speaking, as lightly as possible. Alex McWhirter, travel editor of The Business Traveller, flies you first out of the European air fares jungle

Sometimes expensive. European air fares can also be remarkably cheap. On most holiday routes out of the United Kingdom, for example, you can travel by air for less than the price of a second-class train

The big breakthrough in lowcost European air travel came a few years ago with the introduc-tion of cut-price "seat-only" fares. The government allowed these "cheapies" to be sold in conjunction with vouchers for minimal accommodation at the destination (which passengers are not expected to use).

Scat-only sales are now a booming sector of the travel scene and the charters are cutting into a market once dominated by the scheduled carriers. As people understand the market better the tendency has been to book late, and so prices have fallen further.

Airlines, whether charter or scheduled, cannot sell their special low price, seat-only fares direct to the public; they must be marketed through tour operators or specialized travel

In theory any travel agent can sell you one of these cheapies; in practice too many just do not understand the market. This means that the average traveller has to shop around for the best deals - the best place to start being in the classified columns of the national press or London's Standard.

There are essentially five types of seat-only deals.

have no advance booking.

All fares have different minimum/maximum stay re-strictions. Most are issued for return travel only and cancellation charges are steep. Increasingly, these fares, which are sold through airline ticket offices and high street travel agents, are becoming a poor buy compared to the seat-only specials. Individuals, but not necessarily a family, could lose out buying one of these fares. Unlike the seat-only deals, many airline promotional fares have generous child discounts.

"Consolidation" fares

Specialist tour operators book blocks of seats on scheduled flights which they then sell to individuals at a considerable discount. This enables you to travel on the same flights more cheaply and with fewer restricairline itself can sell you.

The two main operators are London-based Slade Travel and Falcon. Each markets seat-only deals to 100 or so destinations specializing in individual countries. Such tickets are normally sold through bucket shops, although any travel agent worth his salt can also supply them.

Seat-only charter

Charter flights operate mostly to the sunspots of Europe and seats are retailed by operators either to individuals direct or through travel agents. Large operators like Thomson, Cosmos and Horizon all have subsidiaries selling off surplus charter seats. Companies like Pegasus market a proper sear-only "Skybus" programme with scheduled-style charter flights operating to cities in Italy, Spain, Germany and Austria. The charter airline Air Europe went ahead and emblished its tions than with a ticket an own travel company to sell its airline itself can sell you.

Many of these airlines have Nothing is quite as perishable as special rights inside Europe, a an airline seat. Once the plane door shuts that empty seat is worthless. But marketing these empty seats is an expert's job passengers to pay the full fares; and hence it is handled by charter seat brokers. These specialist agents receive daily availability reports from the adventure camps

these last-minute seats are sold off to the public at drastically reduced prices. The discount is often one third off the cheapest charter price and half off the lowest scheduled fare.

Bargains like these are more easily obtainable outside peak travel times. Last minute availability is widely advertised in the classified pages of the national press, If you are flexible this is an ideal way to travel cheaply.

Here is a guide to what you could pay to fly to four holiday areas at June rates.

Scheduled: Best buy are the consolidation fares with Alitalia which cost little more than charter fares. These are marketed by Pilgrim-Air and C.I.T. Typical return fares sold by Pilgrim-Air are: Milan £117, availability reports from the Turin £117, Venice £126, Pisa large tour operators and de-pending on supply and demand £133, Naples £143. Weekend surcharges apply. London-based. Euro Asean Travel offers "fifth freedom" discounts to Rome with flights by Japan Airlines costing £120 return, with Kenya Airways £125 and with Ethiopian also £125, Charters: Main operators in-clude Pegasus Skybus and Pilgrim-Air. Besides the main cities, charters also cover destinations such as Alghero, Brindisi, Cagliari, Catania, Lamezia, Palermo and Rimini. The Pegasus charters can be booked both on a one-way (under the guise of "Special Break") and return basis. You can stay away for any length of time between two and thirty-six days and "open-jaw" (fly to one destination, return from another) arrangements are allowed. A Special Break fare to Venice costs £74, a return fare £119. The same fares to Paiermo are £89 and £149 respectively.

Alghero for £70 and Naples for £85 return. All Vivair prices include airport taxes.

Scheduled: British APEX and Iberia's "Moneysaver" are the cheapest fares available but seats are limited and you must book well in advance. These fares are not sold in the summer peak - July to September. Sample prices: Barcelona £101, Palma £105, Valencia £108, Mahon £108 and Malaga £139. The PEX and Budget rates with fewer restrictions are more expensive. Examples: Palma/ Ibiza £130, Alicante £147, Malaga/ Seville £164, Barcelona £165. Better value are the Slade and Falcon consolidation fares, especially if you travel mid-week. Sample Falcon prices. Alicante/Valencia £129, Seville £143, Malaga £141, Barcelona £118 and Palma £125.

Charters: Prices fluctuate depending on departure airport and flight schedules. There is a huge selection and you must shop around to get the best deal,

Air Europe operates charters from nine United Kingdom airports. Sample return fares: Palma £86, Ibiza £91, Mahon £91, Gerona £79, Alicante £81 and Malaga £102, Iberian Service sells flights to the cities. Sample fares: Barcelona £102, Madrid £105 and Malaga £125. All include taxes.

As you might expect there are plenty of late booking deals. In line. Vivnir quotes the follow. une, Vivair quotes the following inclusive prices: Alicante £65, Barcelona £90, Palma £80

Scheduled: British Airways' late booking fare of £85 one-way, £107 return, is cheapest. Norwhile Slade's prices range from £178 to £210. Except for Corfu there are no direct scheduled flights to the islands so you have to travel via Athens with a consequent increase in fare. Herakhon and Rhodes are around the £210 mark while Corfu costs £189.

Charters: As with Spain this is another shop-around market and charters are the most convenient way of reaching the islands. Typical Air Europe fares are: Athens £128, Kos £156, Corfu £125, Heraklion £135 and Rhodes £146.

Besides the main desti-nations, Olympic Holidays' "Flight Savers" cover lesserknow ones too. Examples: Chania £129, Kos £129, Mykonos £132. Kefalonica £127, Zante £129, Skiathos £139 and Kavala £127. Typical Vivair last-minute bargains in June were Corfu £108, Heraklio £128 and Athens £109

South of France

Scheduled: British Airways and Air France fly to most desti-nations. Den Air serves Montpelier, Toulouse and Perpignan. Once again the consolidation fares offered by Slade and Falcon undercut the cheapest airline prices. Sample Falcon prices: Bordeaux £102, Marseilles £123, Nice £117 to £129, Perpignan £129 and Toulouse Charters: France restricts charter flights and those few that are allowed mostly operate to Nice. Sample prices: Air Europe £97 and Falcon £99. With so few flights, getting a seat can be a

With all these discounts available why should anyone choose to pay full fare? The main reason is flexibility. Full fare tickets allow you to change flights and dates without penalty. You can also make stops en route for no extra cost. But these privileges are expensive. The full unrestricted fare to Athens will set you back £560 almost five times the cost of a charter flight.

Tapping Italy's unfamiliar heel

Ay chosen destination in Italy provoked widespread disbelief. Bari", said my Italian barber n Gray's Inn Road, "is where cople come from. It is not omewhere to go to". Nevertheess, I went, and found Bari populous wealthy civilized and populous, wealthy, civilized and ositively peaceful and relaxing. One felt safe in the narrow vinding streets of the tightly-racked old town clustered on its romontory, though the custom hen it was originally built was o lurc Saracen invaders into he blind alleys and then attack hem from the windows and ooflops above. From the vindows now tumbled nothing out the song of caged canaries and the flutter of pigeons as we imbled among the children playing in the shadow of the nighty Romanesque basilica of Bari's other attractions inlude one of the finest provincial theatres in Italy, good restaurants which in typical Apulian manner double as contemporary art galleries, the massive bastions of the castle, a distinguished seaside promenade and very fashionable shops in the wide and airy parallel streets of the modern town. A pleasant place to be, then, even if by Italian standards there was not a lot to see.

But what had brought me here was a curiosity to explore the unfamiliar heel of Italy. Apulia, the ancient home of Pelasgians and Oscans, source of more wine than even Italians know how to drink, where the Normans built great churches, and the Swabians stark castles. The whole region does indeed have a feeling still of being foreign even from the rest of

The three star attraction, not casily seen except by car, is the Gargano Massif, the shining white spur at Italy's heel, an idyllic promontory jutting into the Adriatic with a coast-line that locals claim as one of the 10 most beautiful in the world.

The Gargano itself has 120 km of honey-coloured cliffs, with limestone coves, stalactite grottoes and sandy beaches skirted by an azure sea. After the quiet port of Manfredonia, dominated by its Angevin castle, there is no industrial or tourist development, save one excellent hotel and conference centre and the scanty grazing on the plateaux supports herds of sheep, goats and black pigs. Returning south, the fields are dotted with cairn-like shelters, mostly empty, but a few sheltering agricultural equipment or crops. Beyond Bari and Gioia del Colle, though, one suddenly realizes that now these dry-wal-led and seemingly prehistoric huts are lived in, giving Apulia its second three-star attraction the Murge dei Trulli.

No one knows when these trulli dwellings originated, though their resemblance to Neolithic hut circles is immediately obvious. The difference is that these, built of flat limestone slabs laid in spiralling courses to form conical roofs, topped with-outlandish finials, are for the most part still in perfect repair. The landscape grows more distinctive as you travel in, the agglomerations of trulli becoming ever more complex and strange until this most curious form of domestic architecture achieves its apogee in the

COLLECTING

A catalogue that speaks volumes

soon resolves into 74 separate stands, each with its own selection of books, and each with its keeper - the bookseller. Although the fair can be thought of as the book trade equivalent of the Grosvenor House Antiques Fair, there is no committee control of stock;

each bookseller can bring exactly what he likes to sell. The more experienced collector will probably arrive early on the first day, seek out the country booksellers who might have had a find in his special field, then seek out his favour-ites for a good gossip and perhaps a major purchase.

This year, a collective cata-logue has been published in advance and one can do some preliminary browsing. Jubilee Books have Lady Whitman's Family Prayers, 1824. In contemporary morocco (albeit rubbed) this presentation copy to her mother, the Countess of Bradford, must be cheap at £8.50. Graham Weiner has a variety of botanical bibliography (the Lloyd library Contribution) at only £100, something I have wanted for

There is also an inflatable globe about 15ft high of c.1830 (O'Shea Gallery, £1,500); 26 coloured plates of the Desastres in Paris in the year of the commune (Rosenthal, £110); 12 tiuted plates of hunting dogs c.1818 (Schuster, £4,000); a collection of 33 official programmes of aerial meetings at the London Aerodrome, Hendon, 1913-19 (Storey, £1,000) and a first edition (mint, in dustwrapper) of Brave New World Revisited (Preslet £7.50).

However, I suspect that the biggest crowd will be round Michael Hosking's stand when he unveils his catalogue of the library of David Garnett, who died in 1981. He wrote various novels - Lady into Fox is the best known - and a remarkable, if rather cold blooded threevolume autobiography.

The Antiquarian Book Fair is here again and the initial impression is of a congress of booksellers held in a sub-tropical aviary. A large room is full of people, noise, heat and books. However, the confusion recongression is of a congress of published on the first day of the fair. I expect to see huddled groups of punters leafing furiously through their catalogues, which runs to some 3,400 items, will be fair. I expect to see huddled groups of punters leafing furiously through their catalogues. the books they want (most of which will actually be at Deal in Kent) and reading on to find new desiderata. It should be a lively time for Mr Hosking, and his customers. This is the 25th year of the fair, so a brief historical excursion is perhaps allowable. Fairs of a rather different type have always played an important part in the book trade. Originally they were a temporary "free port" where all types of merchandise could be sold by retailers not usually free to trade in a particular town or village. England never developed the specialized fairs like Frankfurt or Leipzig, but ordinary fairs about the country were important markets for retailing books in the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries, until they were gradually superseded by the growth of established country booksellers. The modern book fair, which is concerned entirely with second-hand books, dates from 1959. In that year Alan Thomas and his brothers opened in Albermarle Street with bor-

Albermarie Street with borrowed showcases and stayed open for three weeks (a daunting thought); it is now three days.

This lead has been followed extensively: there are now provincial fairs in many parts of Britain and foreign fairs from Britain, and foreign fairs from New York to Tokyo, Indeed one is sometimes tempted to recall the comment made in 1583 on John Wolfe and other booksellers, "They runne up or downe to all ye fairs and markets throughout a great part of Ye Realme, and make sale of them; whose charges in carriage with their expenses in Innes and Alehouses and other places considered ... they return home more poore than they

The fair is at the Europa Hotel, Grosvenor Square, London W1, on June 14-16; 11am-8pm on the first two days, 11am-7pm on the third.

After a traditional English day in the croquet field, Hurling-ham competitors will find untraditional English sustenance on their door-step at the Perfumed Conservatory. A striking plum-coloured awning announces a distinctive style: and indeed this small, twotiered restaurant has an adventurous way with rather solid English ingredients. For example, the often tedious quails' eggs are here served as a starter (£3) on a nest (not the quail's) of salads and smoked chicken, ringed by thoughtfully shelled prawns.

The spirit of adventure is most noticeable in the main courses - English lamb is served in a pastry case (£6.50), pork tenderloin is dressed in a sharp English grain mustard sauce (£5) and Aylesbury duck comes green peppercorns (£7). The selection of vegetables (£1.20) are cooked crisply.

The presentation throughout is exemplary, and is particularly effective in the sweets - cloud pie (£2.20), meringues sand-wiching a purée of fresh fruit, and chocolated thimbles (£1,50) were as good as they looked.

Unidentified, but more than serviceable, house wine comes in bottles (£4.30) and halves (£2.40) with a solitary English wine, Carr Taylor '81 (£7). 152 King's Road, London SW3 (351 3084) Open: noon-3pm and 6-11pm daily short drive (in a car rather than with a croquet mallet) from Hurlingham, will take you to The Pheasantry, a former ballet school among other things, and now the striking location for an excellent, multilayered catering operation. A basement cocktail bar (The Downstairs) is topped by an allday cafe (The Diaghilev), which in turn is capped by an attractive, art-deco style res-taurant, the Mange Tout. The whole enterprise is bound together by the young French chef Philippe Roy who earned a good reputation at that haunt of the jeunesse "hooree". Menage a Trois. He has reorganized the menu to his own distinctive style. The quails' eggs here arrive in a puff pastry case with creamed leek (£2.85) and are excellent. Other openers include a strong lobster bisque (£2.50) and a delicious fresh vegetable terrine with tomato coulis (£2.50).

Choice main dishes include a surprisingly light breast of pheasant stuffed with fole gras and wild mushroom, and served with a truffle sauce (£5.95), and a mousseline de saumon aux coquilles St Jaques (£5.75).

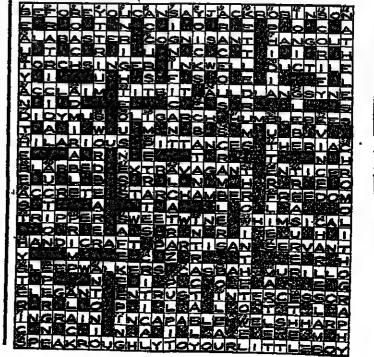

Room should be left for the superb Philippe Olivier selec-tion of cheeses, so ripe they almost stand up as you arrive. After these try the assiste de sorbets with fresh fruit (£2.75).
Good house wine (Valbon, Bouchard Pere et Fils, £4.90) is available, though the list is

I once bought a garden badminton set, with posts made cut of beaten cola tins, for under £3. It gave us all a lot of tun for a few weeks, then collapsed. But by that time, so had the craze. If you are not sure whether your family will take to the game, try the cheap style first, to test its popularity. There is nothing worse than having a £300 unused croquet ect mouldering away in the

Also, bear in mind your attitude towards your garden. Do you have superbly co-ordinated flower beds you would hate to see flattened, or do you regard the garden as a general knockabout place? If the for-mer, choose a game that can be played within an extremely well-defined space.

SHOPFRONT

From candle-glow spilling gently through terracotta "windows" to torchilght blazing magnificently from giant, wrought-fron toasting forks, lighting up a summer night can be magical and romantic. No longer do you have to raly on the utilitarian, bulkhead light, the ubiquitous coach lantern or reproduction street lamp – practical and effective though they might be. Light fittings for the garden now come in all sorts of shapes, sizes and colours. Important as taste is, the principal problem for consumers is choosing the appropriate source of power. Electricity is ideal for a permanent installation, though it is expensive and candies are cheaper, easily accessible and have stood the test of time; and if propane or butane gas well? whatever rue you choose, do take care. Finally, what do you, think of an exotic, tropical garden emblazoned on a boring, blank wall? Light Fantastic (836 6423), a gallery and shop at 48 South Ross, The Market, in London's Covent Garden, are experts at using laser beams to create three-dimensional hotograms. If this is too expensive, then float some tiny ballota flowers in a shallow seucer of oil and gently light the petals. The effect is unbelievably beautiful.

Shading plants

No matter how bad the weather may be in any particular year, there will be times when plants under glass will need some protection from the sun. Glass magnifies the sun's rays and damage occurs easily. Because of the unpredictable weather, I do not like to cost the greenhouse glass with a shading material. In sunny weather it is ideal but when the days are dulf and the sky overcast the material reduces too much the amount of good light but without the full heat of the sun. Compost should be an open, well-drained medium. Aithough Euphorbia milii does grow in a soilless compost I find it better in a soil-based one. Once potted, plants should be allowed to grow until they demand attention; they do not like root disturbance. Young plants should be allowed to become potbound and older plants should not be ra-potted unless they begin to display signs of distress.

Watering should be done only when the plant really needs it. Give it a thorough soaking, allowing the surplus water to drain eway quickly. Do not water again until the soil is quite dry. Watering must not

Stem cuttings taken about now will root readily into a sandy compost. As the plant is a succulent, the cuttings can be laid out on a bench and allowed to dry before inserting. Ideally it should be harm the authorize as it. should be hung like curtains so it can be drawn when the sun is hot. The material should be of an open texture to allow air circulation. Monk who makes millionaires merry

Dom Pérignon is the world's most famous fizz, a deluxe champagne cuvée from Moët et Chandon, that is invariably the most expensive bottle on the wine list and the sort of smart tipple that millionaires insist on drinking. Americans call it DP, which seems a little irreverent but as they drink more of this liquid status symbol than anyone else, perhaps they are entitled to.

No one is quite certain whether Dom Pierre Pérignon, the cellarmaster at the Abbey of Hautvilliers from 1668 of 1715, did invent champagne or whether he really said: "I am drinking stars" after the first sip of his wine. But what does seem likely is that this blind Benedictine monk was the first person to use thick glass bottles and to keep the effervescent' wine relatively safe within, by the use of a cork stopper and string, rather that the rough rag bung of the family.

that had been used previously. Dom Pérignon is also credited as being the first person to make a cuvée, or blend of wines, just as they do today in champagne, by mixing together not just the wines from white and black grapes but also wines not just the wines from white this champagne was predomi-and black grapes but also wines from different champagne areas Moët only use the grapes from to create a truly harmonious 50 hectares of their own blend. In practice, this is a vineyards to make Dom P and righly-skilled operation as I discovered on a recent visit to Hautvilliers. I was faced with six different Dom Pérignon base wines, from which I attempted to make, by using the correct proportions, la vraie Cuvée Dom Perignon. Although Moët et Chandon was founded in 1743, it was not until after the French Revolution that the company acquired the Abbey of Haurvilliers and not until 1921, that the first Dom Perignon cuvee was introduced, simply for friends

Admittedly the Dom Périg-non cuvée has changed slightly over the years and nowadays it is made from a blend of about 60 per cent Pinot Noir to 40 per cent Chardonnay; 20 years ago from an average of 40-year-old vines at that. Moet's expert oenologist Edmond Maudière modestly explains away Dom Perignon's finesse by stating We pick the best grapes from the best vineyards and we make the best selection ... it's no

On average, this elegant cuvee is made five times every decade. The world, especially America, simply can't get enough of the stuff, so Dom Perignon frequently goes on allocation, which must upset those American millionaires no end. Maudière always puts together the Dom Perisnon cuvee after he has made all the other Moet blends whether it be for the non-vintage Moët et Chandon Dry Imperial, or for Ruinart or Mercier (both these houses now belong to the Moet group)

tage may be in the offing he looks for a "rich, full complex wine, with different aromas, a perfect balance and a long, lingering aftertaste". Although he usually has about 25 different cures at his disposal, of which he generally selects around six to ten to go into the final blend, it comes as no surprise to learn that M. Maudière says "Dom Pérignon is not an easy wine, it's a challenge"

Since 1972 he has had another challenge, that of making a methode champenoise wine, in California's Napa Valley - Domaine Chandon's Napa Valley Brut whose crisp, lively, refreshing style goes down well on the West Coast and is now available over here (Adnams, Sole Bay Brewery, Southwold, Suffolk £12.88; La Vigneronne, 105 Old Brompton Road, London SW7 £13.50). I suspect that the instantly recognizable dark green eight-centh-century-style Dom PérigTune is our secret

George Macaulay Trevelyan, the historian, observed with great acuteness that "if the French noblesse had been capable of playing cricket with their peasants, their châteaux would never have been burnt".

This remark earns him a mention in J. L. Carr's Dictionary of Extra-Ordinary Cricketers, an eccentric compilation which omits to mention Sir Donald Bradman, in spite of his being indisputably the greatest batting genius in the history of Test cricket, yet includes Sir Winston Churchill simply to record the fact that "he did not play cricket".

Mr Carr's book is clearly not intended for the serious student of the game; it is, however, an invaluable aid to after-dinner speakers on cricket.

The reader is introduced to characters such as The Rev Lord Frederick Beauclerk, who used to demonstrate his conmiddle stump, and was said to be an unutterably dull preacher", and John Jackson, of Nottinghamshire, a shy man who customarily blew his nose in embarrassment after clean-bowling someone, and was consequently known as "Fog-

Mr Carr is fond of literary or historical allusions, however abstruse, and writes that Gilbert Jessop's 1902 innings of 104 in 77 minutes when England, needing 200 to win, were 48 for five, "can only be compared with Henry V's speech before Botham's 149 at Headingley in 1981 would belong in a similar category, one might have thought, but Mr Carr contents himself with bracketing Botham with Jessop, Spofforth, Trumper et al as belonging to cricket's golden age. He also quotes Shelley's Adonais.

The inescapable "Both", or "Guy the Gonilla", as he is also known, turns up again in the more serious, but duller Crick-eters' Who's Who in 1983, edited by Iain Sproat, MP, which gives the nickname of every county cricketer. "Both" writes the introduction.

Mr Sproat provides much data in his 476 pages, but it is of routine kind which provides little insight into a cricketer's character, or his particular Carr's Elestrated Dictionary of Extra-Ordinary Cricketers edited by J. L. Carr (Quartet Books, £2.50) The Cricketers' Who's Who 1983

A disappointing number of players have nicknames which simply involve the addition of a "y" to their surnames, and list their favourite recreation as "watching telly with the wife", or something similar.

For the true addict there is, of course, only one indispensable cricket book, and that is Wisden, which celebrates its 120th edition this year.

At £8.95, the Wisden Cricketers' Almanac is outstanding value. It runs to 1,300 pages, tempt for bowlers by suspend-ing a gold watch from his cricketers and issues of the day, reports from cricketing countries all over the world, reports on minor countles, second XI and schools cricket, scorecards from every first-class fixture in 1982 (even including the South African tour by Gooch's rebels), and more than 100 pages of cricketing records. The whole is edited with crusty elegance by our own cricket correspondent,

In search of the perfect Proust

Here is the paperback of the newly revised and translated edition of one of the great novels of our century, published in hardback two years ago. You might ask: "What's it all for?" Why not read A la recherche du temps perdu in French, or in Scott Moncrieff's famous translation, which even the French are said, unpersuasively, to read in preference to the original? The answer is that the original French edition from which Scott Moncrieff worked was notoriously imperfect, principally because of Proust's methods of composition, which produced a labyrinthine palimpsest for publishers and printers. In mid-stream be: expanded the book from its original 500,000 words to more than a million and a quarter. the purple and Gallic, whereas Proust's style, though complicated and dense, is essentially natural and unaffected, free from preciosity and purple, Kilmarim has amended it with great tact, preserving the un-questioned felicities of Scott Moncrieff, while getting as close as possible to Proust. It is the best possible entry in translation into that hypnotic world: "Longiemps je me suis couché de bonne heure..."

Also published this month is George D. Painter's Marcel Proust (Penguin, £5.95), the biography that gets to the heart of the making of a masterpiece.

Also just published in the Oxford Past Masters series is Proust by Derwent May (Oxford, £1.75), a helpful introduction to the Master, which explores the historical and social aspects of Proust's novel.

Pakistan through the A perfect eyes of a Marxist

Tariq Ali is currently best know in this country for his attempt as yet inconclusive - to become a member of Hornsey Labour Party. But, being a true internationalist, he has not lost interest in the affairs of his native subcontinent. In this "extended essay" (as he calls it), he answers his own question rather less conclusively than the subtitle implies.

حكدًا من المدعل

A lot of what he has to say should be quite acceptable to "bourgeois" liberals who have studied the history of Pakistan. He probably overemphasizes the role of deliberate British policy in the growth of Muslim eparatism, but he is surely right to dispute the existence of any such thing as a Muslim "nation or "nationality" in pre-partition

Nor is he the first to chronicle the amazing short-sightedness with which successive rulers treated East Pakistan in the years between 1947 and 1971, with the eventual consequence that today Pakistan, founded on Jinnah's dictum that "the Muslims are a nation", actually contains only the third largest Muslim population in the subcontinent.

Equally one does not need to be a Marxist to agree that there is still no organic unity between the four component provinces of the present Pakistan, and that the present regime's policies only encourage the people of Sind and Baluchistan to think north-west frontier probably think of it in much the same way, but regard it as a lesser evil than the Soviet occupation suffered by their fellow-Pakhtun across the frontier in Afghanistan.) Or indeed to agree that Bhutto was a shallow populist autocrat who dug his own grave by, among other things, using the army against the elected government of Baluchistan.

One's objection must be that

Tariq Ali persists in writing as a Marxist for fellow-Marxists. Too much space is devoted to obscure debates among Comintern theorists about key terms (including "nation" and "nationality") which Ali himself uses but does not clearly define. That the welfare of the people can be identified with the success and strength of Marxist parties is taken for granted in a way that the inconverted are bound to find

Ali rightly criticizes his friend Fred Halliday for being too soft on the Russians and their Afghan applytes. But Halliday could teach bim something about writing for the non-Marxist Penguin reader.

It is almost embarrassing to add to the sumptuous heaps of praise which have been piled on Anton Mosimann's Cuisine à la Carte. The choicest gobbets of eulogy are prettily arranged for all to see on the back cover of the large format illustrated paperback edition (Papermac, £6.95).

At the kitchen launching party he gave last week at the Terrace Restaurant of the Dorchester Hotel, the chicken liver parfait with truffles (page 97) slipped down as smoothly as any pâté this side of heaven. It would be cruel (and there is not enough space here anyway) to list the succession of ravishing morsels set out for our delectation, but the rendez vous de fruits-de-mer (page 175) was rated well up to scratch by those of us who have cooked it often since the hardback was

On the day the election was announced, the publishers decided to bring forward the publication of this "major new" biography of Mrs Thatcher in paperback. The book, in a sense, was out of date on publication (since nobody then knew that she was going to win), though it is by no means an item to be discarded.

Daughter Carol did not have to face her worst fears: "Goodness mel If Mum loses the election, what are we going to do with her? But principal characters in the Australian matic males. director's striking output never have an easy life wherever they are. Passing motorists in The Cars That Ate Paris (1974) fell prey to flendish socidents; turn-of-the-century schoolgiris in Picnic at Hanging Rock (1975) vanished into the eerie landscape. Supernatural weather drenched Richard Chamberlain in The Last Wave (1977), while the soldiers of Gallipoli (1981) were swamped by the cruel facts of the First World War. Ordinary mortals in Weir's films are repeatedly confronted with mysterions, implacable forces. Guy Hamilton, the journalist hero of The Year of Living Dangerously, is no exception. He arrives in Jakarta for his first foreign assignment, equipped with innocence and a tape recorder. Before the end, political turnoil and romantic entanglements have caused both to be abandoned.

Financially speaking, Weir's film lived less dangerously than many Australian films. The six-million-dollar budget from MGM provided economic stab-Bity (this is the first Australian The Year of Living Descences), production to be fully financed opens in London on Jens 16 at the and distributed – by a big Empire 2, ABC Shaftesbury Hollywood company). Films on TV

His absurdly overpaid cameo appearance in Superman may have dismayed admirers of Marlon Brando who prefer to remember him for better and worthier things; but fortunately his reputation as one of the most formidable screen actors of the last 30 years was already secure. A season of his work on BBC2 should help to explain why. It starts on Tuesday with his Fletcher Christian, opposite Trevor Howard's Captain Bligh in the 1962 remake of Mutiny on the Bounty (7.40-10.30pm).

In future weeks there is a chance to see Brando's 1950 screen debut in The Men; two other early pictures which were crucial to his career and contain definitive examples of method acting, A Streetcar Named Desire and On the Waterfront: and the only film he has so far directed, a powerful and eccen-tric revenue Western, One Eyed

Ten years earlier than Brando, Orson Welles made the same sort of impact on the cinema and after Citizen Kane itself, the best of his early parts was Rochester in the brooding 1944 version of Jane Eyre, which Channel 4 is showing today (2.45-4.35pm).

These Three, on Channel 4 tomorrow (10.20pm-12.05am), was the first screen adaptation of Lillian Hellman's play about rumours of a lesbian relationship at a girls' school; except that lesbianism was still a taboo subject in 1936 and extra-marital affairs were substituted. Miriam Hopkins and Merle Oberon play the teachers under suspicion and the director was

William Wyler.
On Thursday, BBC2 is showing the original King Kong (6.20-7.55pm) in which poor Fay Wray, not to mention the entire city of New York, is terrorized by a giant ape, and though made 50 years ago, its trick photography and special effects are still impressive.

My tipping takes a turn for the worse

The finals of the Sobranie Challenge for the club cham-pionship of Great Britain 1983 were played at the Park Lane Hotel, London. From an original entry of 485 teams, 13 had qualified by winning the regional finals to join the holders, St John's Wood, as guests of the sponsors.

The excitement started before card was played. Peter Razalgette, the producer of BBC's television series "Grand Slam", announced that the BBC had decided to involve club players in the next series. He proposed to invite a pair from each of the eight leading teams to join four established experts in these programmes. It is a tribute to the excellent spirit of the competitors that despite prizes worth £6,000 and the extra incentive of a television appearance, the tournament director was required to arbitrate on nothing more conten-

Chess

When the postman brings the next move

The game of chess has almost infinite variety; as well as the main pursuit of over-the-board play, there are many allied activities, some near to the remote from it. Two that come readily to mind are the chess problem and correspondence

Very few great players have been good or enthusiastic problemists though Emanuel Lasker was wont to admit to being an expert. One expert problemist who was also a nearmaster at chess was the Dutchman Weenink,

Much nearer to the game itself is correspondence chess, it has the virtue of encouraging its practitioners to add to opening theory and quite a number of important opening variations have been discovered by correspondence players.

world champion 1894-1921

The pretty little game by Eileen Tranmer that I gave the other week was played by correspondence and I got it from an excellent work just published, British Correspon-dence Chess Association 1906-1981, The Official History of the First 75 Years by D. J. Rogers (98pp, £2). As well as much entertaining matter, it contains 15 well-annotated games. Copies are available from J. Allain. honorary secretary BCCA, 86 Mortimer Road, London NI. Cheques and postal orders should be made payable to the

I have been quoted in it as having spoken sharply against chess by post, but also as having taken part, paradoxically enough, in a BCCA handicap tourney 50 years ago. I did indeed take up correspondence chess in my youth, but gave it up since I found life too short for both postal and over-theboard play. My immediate cause for abandoning it arose when I took to making my moves blindfold, that is to say, without looking at a chessboard. One of my games was against a Church of England clergyman who, in reply to a blindfold move, sent back one reading PaR! I took the exclamation mark as an unkind cut coming from a member of the cloth, and shook the dust of correspondence chess from my feet forever. This I rather regret now, and if anyone wishes to enrich his mental life by playing games through the post he should address his inquiries to E Lippiatt, 25 Bancroft Street. Bulwell, Nottingham NG6 9HF.

As an example of beautiful correspondence chess I give a game won by the 16 year-old Paul Keres in Estonia in 1931-

The aims of the camps are: to help preserve a great national heritage of cathedrals; to undertake important jobs of conservation and restoration of cathedrals and their environments which have previously been postponed through lack of resources, and to give volunteers the chance of working together in "a rewarding activity for the benefit of others in a cathedral environment".

The number of volunteers has grown from 60 in 1981 to 310 (so far) in 1983.

"I guess you wouldn't understand what buying this company seems like to an Ameri-can", Mr Alfred Taubman said yesterday after announcing his intention to bid for the Sotheby Parke Bernet art auctioneering group. "It is like coming over here and buying the throne. Sotheby is an institution."

Mr Taubman, who is 58, has a fringe of wiry grey hair framing a tanned face. He is tall and plumpish in a dark business suit, with cufflinks of knotted gold, the only visible sparkle of wealth. He has been identified as one of the 10 richest men in the US by Forbes magazine. "I think they said I was worth around $550m but that kind of calculation is just nonsense", he said yesterday.

. He intends to offer something over the £60m bid for Sotheby's made by Knoll International Holdings without recourse to borrowing. "I wouldn't say I had it in ready cash. But there's and cash really, is there?"

To underline the point, he explains that he was the second largest shareholder in a partner-ship which sold its investment in the Irvine Ranch for a cool $1bn (£633m) two monts ago.

Mortgage fears

An increase in mortgage rates looks increasingly likely unless interest rates come down substantially in the next two months to attract sufficient money to satisfy mortgage demand, now running at record levels. Last month they pulled in only £319m when they need at least £700m to maintain lending at present

The Building Societies Association has cased an extraordinary council meeting on June 22 to decide on mortgage rates and unless there is a cut in interest rates between now and then, homebuyers could find themselves paying an extra 1.5 per cent more for home loans.

This would put the rate up to 11.5 per cent and would cost a borrower with a new £25,000 loan an extra £17 a month after tax relief.
The societies have failed in recent.

"Without an increase in the inflow of funds, societies will be obliged to cut back their mortgage lending which would result in an inevitable lengthening of mortgage queues", said an association spokesman. Some societies are streatly have spokesman, Sonie accesses are access training borrowers away and many have three-month waiting lists.

Any increase in home loan rates announced on June 22 would come into effect on July 1.

Market for the rich, brave

Gold is holding its head above the choppy waters of $400 an ounce, but there are few people in the market who would rule out the possibility of its sinking In the circumstances, investment in the metal or in shares and coins is even riskier than

and foolish

The market is baffled because all the signals conflict. The balls can point to lower or at least static interest rates, the continuing international debt crisis, and the alleged "resistance level" at this price on the charts and in computer trading programmes.

Against that the bears say interest rates will rise if anything that fabrication de-mand for gold is weak, and speculators can still make more money in other markets. There is also a chance that some hardpressed countries will sell gold

One reasonably clear fact is that the speculative buying which buoyed the market earlier in the year has vanished. Speculators abandoned gold at the end of January when the expected cut in American interests rates failed to materialized. Gold has lost $100 an ounce since then,

The departure of speculators has left the metal at the mercy of physical demand. But, as Consolidated Gold Fields has argued, demand is finely balanced around the current price. A decline revives fabrication buying while a rise quickly stops it, depending on the strength of the dollar and on real interest

If bullion has no obvious direction, other forms of gold investment are even more unpredictable. Gold mine shares, particularly South African, are widely thought to be :::" overpriced. Apart from not yet fully discounting the weakness of the market, the mines also face rapid cost increases.

Nor is a falling market, or one in which a fall is quite possible, the time to pay a premium for coins. Kruger-rands are selling at about $10 over the metal price. A bullion =: collapse could therefore leave the holder of coins very exposed

This is a market for the brave (or foolish) and the rich. There is still a respectable body of opinion which maintains that gold will end the year higher than it is now. A typical market reaction whereby operators decide that a commodity is underpriced is all that is

But that is for risk takers. With real interest rates at their current level, the potential investor in gold is probably best advised to wait until the direction of the market is

Conveyancing

How agents plan to cut the cost of buying a home by 50pc

Last year, homebuyers paid an estimated £1,000m in legal fees to solicitors for conveying their properties.

Mr David Southwell, of the National Institute of Conveyancing Agents, which represents 61 conveyancing practices, reckons this is too much, and that his members could cut homebuyers' legal fees by as much as 50 per cent.

More than 1.3 million home-buyers moved house last year -860,000 raised a building society loan and approximately 430,000 borrowed from the

For every buyer there is also a seller and the legal fees on these 1.3 million transactions would average an estimated £500 (£250 each for buyer and seller). This produces a total legal fees bill of £650m.

Maternity-leave woman not given suitable job

A woman's right to return to her only Mr Brown was offered the old job, or a suitable alternative, after maternity leave has been declined. upheld in a test case under the Employment Protection Act of 1978.

The London North Industrial Tribunal unanimously an-nounced last week that it found that Microgen, a Hertfordshire-based company dealing in computer services, had dis-criminated against Mrs Caro-line Brown Williams, its former southern region production manager, by failing to provide her with suitable employment after her return from confine-

The case is believed to be the first time that a woman has successfully contested section 45 of the Act. This states that if an employee's job becomes redundant during maternity leave, she should be offered a suitable alternative employ ment on her return to work. If this is not provided, then this is construed as an act of unfair dismissal. Mrs Brown Williams was also found to have been discriminated against under the 1975 Sex Discrimination Act. The main issue was that

Microgen had agreed to materdity leave for Mrs Brown Williams from November 16, 1981, until August 30, 1982. But a month before she was 10 return to work, she was told that the management structure had been changed and she would be-

Microgen did not offer Mrs Brown Williams the job al-though the tribunal said in its report on the case: "It was not disputed, as a question of fact, that in her job as regional production manager the appli-cant had been responsible for 75 per cent of the workload of the company," She also received a higher salary than Mr Brown, the tribunal said. Microgen offered Mrs Brown

Williams a choice of other employment as a client services repesentative or as manageress of an inquiry service for its building division at the same salary she was receiving in her last job. But her solicitor, Mr John Angel, contended that this contravened the Sex Discrimination Act in that she was not promoted for a position to which she was qualified. He also maintained that it infringed the Employment Protection Act in that she was now being offered a job on less favourable

In finding for Mrs Brown Williams and ordering that compensation should be agreed between the two parties, the tribunal said in its report. The tribunal could not help but wonder what would have happened if she had not taken her statutory leave to have her -unable to return to her old baby. A regular savings plan bringing high returns

If you are aged between 16 and 70 and married or with dependent children we can offer you a rare opportunity. We'll help you save a handsome lump sum over a 10 year period and give you up to £2,000 life assurance protection too. In addition, at the end of the plan we'll pay out all your savings plus the interest you've earned entirely free of tax. We call this opportunity the Leeds Friendly Assurance Plan.

How does the scheme work?

You pay a regular monthly or yearly premium for 10 years to Homeowners Friendly Society. They boost your premium with a special tax concession, deducting a small amount for life cover and management expenses. The rest is invested in a special account with the Leeds and starts earning interest immediately. Ten years later you get both your savings and your interest back without a penny owed to the tax-man. The higher the rate of tax you normally pay the more valuable this investment will prove.

How much can you save?

There are a number of different plans available, each with a set premium. Because the scheme is so profitable the maximum amount you can save is limited to £20.60 a month or $247.26 a year per investor (double for a married couple). Each of the plans gives a very good return although the exact return you get at the end of 10 years depends on your age, variations in interest rates and whether or not you pay an annual premium (this gives a higher return than a monthly premium). For details take a look at the table opposite which also lists examples of potential returns.

Why pay tax on your investmentswhen you don't have to?

Tax-exempt savings plans are completely exempt from income tax and capital gains tax. Consequently, they offer the most tax-efficient way, apart from a pension scheme, to invest in a TAX-FREE fund—giving you an advantage of up to 40% over ordinary taxed investments, such as building societies and stocks and shares.

You can make a regular investment, about £25 a month or just under £300 a year. Or, if you want to invest a lump sum of about £1,800 now, you can fund your regular premiums at a discount of more than 30%.

This is an exceptional investment opportunity, available to you only if you are married or if you have a dependent child — but married couples can both invest. For details, please complete the coupon and return it to us

Even so the performance of Arbuthnot's Smaller Companies Fund has been consistently outstanding, as the graph clearly demonstrates. Now it is poised to do even better.

The signs of economic recovery are growing from day to day, particularly in the US and the UK, where the greater part of the portfolio is invested at present.

And clearly the British Government has assigned them an important and favourable role in its overall economic strategy.

Yow hold on a minute, we hear you say. Hasn't Australia been suffering from a world-wide recession? Aren't imports running at a much higher level than exports because of low commodity prices and falling demand? Didn't a severe drought hit agricultural production last year?

True, all true. But behind the clouds we can detect a silver lining. Indications are that investors need have few worries about the new Government. In our view, now that the election is over speculators who were forcing Australian share prices down before the election will disappear and the new Labour Government's main aim will be to restore confidence both at home and with the foreign investor. More important, the international economic background is now favourable and minerals will reappear on many shopping lists. And not just to meet current demand.

Many industries will be keen to build up stocks which have been allowed to run down during the recent hard times. The supplier they will frequently turn to is Australia.

AUSTRALIA'S MINERAL WEALTH.

Australia has huge reserves of iron ore, bauxite, uranium, mineral sands, nickel, lead, copper and diamonds, not to mention precious metals

Already a net energy exporter, Australia's position should further improve as Japan and the developing countries of South-East Asia continue to prosper.

Australia is also their obvious source of raw materials. Indeed, we expect that demand for Australian natural resources will continue to rise until the end of the century.

It is only fair to point out that many Australian companies are relatively small. Individually, they can suffer if projects fail, as can the private investor. To reduce risk, we have cast our net wide, selecting only the most promising Australian shares. In the course of our investigations, our management team visits Australia to inspect mines and talk to geologists as well as decision makers in local companies.

What could be a risky venture in less capable hands can be an attractive market for the knowledgeable investor.

BARCLAYS UNICORN AUSTRALIA TRUST.

WHAT THE F.T. SAID.

In November last year the ET. reported: "Australia has almost unlimited potential-its vast mineral and energy wealth being complemented by telative political stability and fiercelydefended democratic values?

An assertion which adds weight to our belief that now is the time to invest in Barclays Unicorn Australia Trust which aims for long term capital growth by investing mainly in a spread of Australian companies.

You should remember, though, that the price of units and the income from them can go down as well as up.

But since last year's market low on 8th July, our Trust has been the best performing specialist Australian unit trust, the offer price having increased by 40.8% to 8th June 1983, and over a six year period by 76.2% compared with a rise of 66.0% by the Australian All Ordinary Index.*

We urge you to post the coupon without delay.

PRICES AND YIELDS.

The offer price of units, which can change daily, was 95.3p on 8th June 1983 while the current estimated annual gross yield was 1.28%. Income is paid on 1st August and 1st February.

For investments made prior to 3rd December 1985, the first distribution will be on 1st February 1984.

more, An initial charge of 5% is made when units are issued. There is an annual charge of 1% of the Trust's value, plus VAT which is deducted from the Trust's realize. 1 F & C Income Fund

Objective

The objective is to achieve the maximum possible increase in unitholders' income consistent with steady capital growth. The current grow yield is 7.5% and the intention is to keep the yield at a level 50% higher than the Financial Times Actuaries All Share Index which currently yields 4.7%. The bulk of the portfolio will be invested

Investment Philosophy

The portfolio will be concentrated initially on companies falling into three major categories.

Long term growth companies - About 30% of the portfolio will be invested in companies which should increase profits and dividends steadily and substantially over the years. While the initial yields on these stocks may be low their growth prospects must make them an important part of the portfolio.

Secure high yields - About 50% of the portfolio will be invested in companies which, although solid and dependable, are not adequately

Special situations - A maximum of 20% of the portfolio will be invested in recovery stocks, companies at a large discount to their asset value and other exceptional situations.

Investment Policy

From its beginnings in 1868 the F & C Group has recognised the importance of above average income growth for investors. In recent years our funds have been successful in increasing their income by substantially more than the rate of inflation and the expertise which has brought this about will also be applied to the F & C Income Fund.

Potential investments will be carefully assessed to ensure that they meet our enteria of secure income and the likelihood of both share prace and dividend growth.

Information about companies will come from our wide range of broking contacts and also through meetings and discussions with the

2 F & C Capital Fund

The objective is to provide the maximum possible capital growth commensurate with stability and security. The portfolio will be invested internationally wherever prospects are brightest. The current gross Investment Philosophy The fund will focus on companies offering prospects of sustained growth in earnings and dividends. These are some of the areas which appear particularly attractive for the 1980's.

Micro electronics — The silicon chip (and increasingly now the gallium arsenide chip) has proved to have numerous applications. As the power of the chip increases and its price falls new applications will open up to add to the myriad of opportunities that have already sprung up.

Biotechnology – The harnessing of genetic engineering to the production of chemicals and drugs is in its infancy. However, the potential is as dynamic as that of micro electronics.

Telecommunications – The forthcoming privatisation of British Telecom and the splitting up of AT&T in the USA, coupled with the convergence of computers and communications products are making this a very exciting area.

Security - Crime is Britain's fastest growing industry. Commerical properties have long had sophisticated protection and this is certain to continue. Even more exciting prospects are emerging for companies specialising in the domestic market.

Investment Policy

The F & C Group with over a hundred years of international investment expertise, is skilled in identifying growth companies throughout the world. Investments for the F & C Capital Fund will be made only after careful evaluation of the prospects for individual economies and stock markets and an assessment of the potential risks and rewards of particular sectors and companies. As a guide, the offer price on June 8 was 73.0p per unit.

3 F & C Far Eastern Unit Trust

Objective

The objective of the fund is to achieve long term capital growth through investment in quoted securities in the markets of the Far Eastern region including Australia. The gross yield is 1.2%.

Investment Philosophy Japan - The recovery of the Japanese stock market which commenced in October 1982 is under way. The fund will seek to identify the following areas of opportunity:

(a) Companies whose research and development expenditures are being redirected into new growth areas. (b) The beneficiaries of the consumer and industrial technologies particularly in electronics and telecommunications in which Japan leads the world. (c) Those companies best placed to take advantage of shifting domestic con-

Singapore/Malaysia - Both economies have weathered recession better than expected and the stock markers have been buoyant. Malaysia and Singapore are poised to resume strong historic rates of growth following an upturn in the world economy.

Australia - The Australian economy will be the major beneficiary of renewed growth in the developed world. The initial reaction to the election of Mr. Hawke has been positive. Industrial stocks are modestly valued and the natural resource sector represents a major long term call upon the mineral and agricultural riches of the sub-continent.

Hong Kong-The stock market has recovered from the lows of December but remains historically cheap. Although there is concern over relations with China, resolution of the 1997 lease issue will result in a substantial rerating of the market. Investment Policy

The majority of the fund's investments will be in equities quoted in the more mature markets of the area. These economies present the greatest prospects for long term growth and are a formidable combination of natural and human resources. Individual investment decisions will be based upon economic outlook, and the relative prospects of an industry and its constituent companies.

As a guide, the offer price on June 8 was 32.3p per unit.

Now you can invest £1,000 or more in the GRELLA Equity Fund and profit from expert investment management of a closely monitored spread of UK equities selected from the most attractive sectors of the market.

Emphasis is on well-managed companies with above average prospects for growth. The objective is to achieve steady growth in unit values over the medium to long term through capital growth and reinvested income, balanced by the security of sound investment. Whilst the performance illustrations in this advertisement show how successful these objectives have been, the future rate of growth of units cannot be forecast or currenteed. (Institute may no down as well as be forecast or guaranteed. Unit prices may go down as well as up, but over the medium to long term, growth can reasonably be expected.

Better than a bank or building society?

The beauty of GRE's Investment Bond is that your money is The beauty of GRE's investment bond is may your money is managed by GRE's professional investment team, and is spread across a wider selection of stocks and shares than an individual investor could normally manage. And when you compare the results with other forms of investment, you'll see how much better off you would have been with GRE over the last four years. (See the illustrations on the right.)

How the Bond works

You can invest £1,000 or more in a GRE Investment Bond simply by completing the application below and posting it along with your chaque, to GRE Linked Life Assurance Limited. The Equity Fund is divided into Accumulation Units, the value of each unit being related to the value of net assets within the fund. An amount of 102% of your payment, less £80, is allocated to Accumulation Units in the Equity Fund. So the larger the

Amount allocated to units £370

Investment £1,000 £2,500 £5,000

The number of units allocated depends upon the offer price at the time we receive your application and cheque.

What are the current charges?

The offer price of the Accumulation Units includes a once only 5% initial charge. A management charge of just 4,% of the asset value of the fund is made annually. These charges may be

All the expenses of dealing in and maintaining and valuing the assets are borne by the fund. There are no other charges connected with the investment or encashment of the Bond.

Cashing your Bond

You may cash your Bond at any time at the full bid price. Normally, payment will be made on request, but the right is reserved to defer payment for up to one month in exceptional

You can withdraw cash regularly

You may withdraw up to 5% per annum of your initial investment for up to 20 years — completely free of all forms of taxation at the time, including higher rate tax. Your cash with drawal may be made monthly, quarterly, half-yearly, or annually, providing each withdrawal is £50 or more.

On each withdrawal, the number of units allocated to your Bond is reduced. Whether the value of your Bond reduces over time will depend on whether the value of units grows at a rate sufficient to cover your regular withdrawals.

A tax efficient investment

There is no personal liability to basic rate income tax or capital There is no personal liability to basic rate income tax of capital gains tax on any profit you have made when you cash in your Bond. There may, however, be some liability to higher rate tax (including investment income surcharge) taking account of all payments received under the Bond. By arranging for the Bond to be cashed in at a time when income has been reduced, as on retirement, it is often possible to reduce or even eliminate such a liability. The tax position is clearly described in our investment Bond brochure which is available tree on request (please contact Mike Sawkill on Lytham St. Annes (0253) 733151 during normal office hours or write using the FREEPOST address below). Information about tax is based on our current understanding of law and practice.

Watch your investment performance

Two prices are quoted for Accumulation Units: the offer price at which units are allocated and the bid price at which units may be realised. You can check your unit prices daily in the press.

Built-In life assurance

The Bond is technically a single premium whole life policy and at least the full amount of your single premium is guaranteed to be returned, should you die while the Bond is in force. The benefit payable on death is the greater of the bid value of the units at the date of death, and the single premium. (If you have made any cash withdrawals, the single premium is reduced by

The stock market gave a cautious thumbs-up to the Conservative election victory yesterday as share prices recovered from a hesitant start to close marginally higher on the day.

Jobbers appeared reluctant to make a market first thing and, as a result, prices opened easier as profit-taking developed among most blue chip com-Danies. But the selling proved short-lived, despite the lack of a positive lead from the gilt and money markets. The FT Index ended the day 0.7 higher at 717.1, having been 4.7 off at the Start. Dealers reported renewed contemplating a £50m rights US support after hours, as Wall Street celebrated the Tory win, with Glaxo recovering an early fall to close 40p higher at 895p. CRICKET: THE FAVOURITES PAY HEAVILY FOR THEIR COMPLACENCY

Indians do cartwheels after defeating West Indies

By Keith Macklin D TRAFFORD: India (4pis) beat st Indies by 34 runs. For the second successive day Prudential World Cup duced a riveting finish and astonishing result. Might, m and logic will probably vail in the end, but India ned Zimbabwe in putting the well and truly among the cons and shaking the comcency of the favourites.

West Indies lost for the first ie in the World Cup and lia won only their second tory, the other being against st Africa in 1975.

Overnight West Indies were for two off 22 overs and ressive scoring was needed. e Indian players sensed the. ssibility of a shock win as ly as the second over when chards, such a prolific and lly caught behind the wicker Binny. This was just the rt India needed and Kapil v, their captain, brimmed th confidence.

The Indian fieldsmen jumped the air again at 96 when chus was bowled neck and p by the fiery Madan Lal, d yet again at 107 when tion lifted Binny high and. o the hands of Sandhu at ep mid-off. Gomes was run out by ndhu going for a third run, d tight bowling by Binny and aggression of Madan Lalpt West Indies on the fensive. Even the broad bat of byd was beaten several times

Holding was missed on the a groundry edge by Amarnath, but mattered little since Shastri owled him and West Indies cre down and out at 157 for

To the wicket came the long, outhing, figure of the "Big ird," Joel Garner, joining

Roberts in the seemingly hope-less task of producing a century stand for the last wicket. The wise old heads in the pavillion and in the crowd recalled Murray and Roberts against Pakistan in 1975 and others reminded us that both Roberts and Garner have been known to swing the bat justily and effectively.

So it proved, as the two fast bowlers made a mockery of much of the world-class batting that had gone before. Both batsmen showed a partiality for the left-arm slows of Shastri and after Roberts had lifted him for six over mid-wicket, Garner took a four and a six off successive balls. With 12 overs to go Roberts and Garner required seven runs an over, Madan Lal had bowied his 12 overs, so had Binny, and Kanil Dev brought himself back to stem the tide of runs, Garner glanced him to-leg for an exquisite four and when the 50 partnership was reached, Indian heads in the field began to drop and the furrows deepend on the brow of their captain. The scoring rate required dropped to six an over as Garner clouted an enormous six off Patil.

Came the 55th over to be bowled by Shastri. The Indian spectators groaned anticipating sixes galore from the mighty bats of Roberts and Garner. Shastri loped gently to the wicket; pitched up a tempting spinner, Garner lunged forward and Kirmani, swooping like a kestrel whipped off the bails,

The Indian team did cartwheels of delight, Garner dug his bat into the ground and the World Cup witnessed another remarkable and welcome result. INDIA: 262 for 8 (Yashpal Sharme 89).

Won again.

Once again the gods are smiling on the Prudential World Cup, and not just through rays of sunshine. The opening marches, in danger of being swamped by the General Election, have revitalized the 1983 season, Cricket, the great leveller, is back with a vengeance.

Those who went to Trent Bridge Those who went to Trent Bridge, expecting to cast their votes in good time after watching Australia glorying in the slaughter of Zimbabwe, will have had a rude shock From 500-l two weeks ago, Zimbabwe's odds against winning the Cup had soared to 1,000-l. As a result of beating Australia, they have dropped to 100-l. Ladbrokes said yesterday that they have "attracted interest from small speculators". speculators".

Before the competition began Fietcher, Zimbabwe's captain, admitted they would be fortunate to pick up one win, and if that happened, it would come about against India. Today they play them at Leicester, fears of fast bowling vanquished. The win over Australia was a splendid personal triumph for Fletcher, who, without wishing to be unkind, looked hardly a world-beat-er when I saw him in the warm-up match against Minor Counties.

Zimbabwe are, of course, new-comers to top international cricket.

Willis, England's captain, who Willis, England's captain, who ordered his team to attend special practice at Taunton yesterday, could not conceal his delight at the way they hit back at their critics through the manner of their win over New Zealand, their winter torturers.

It is so often a different story on home soil. "We outplayed New Zealand in every department", Willis said. With Lamb scoring a century and Gattine weighing in for inexperienced at the one-day game, were in the first final in 1975. Then they were led by Ian Chappell, even though he did not seem much to enjoy whan bam stuff, was nevertheless, a past master at it. Somehow it is still not Australia's game, and it is most certainly not At Headingley today conflict is renewed with their opponents of that final, West Indies, who are licking their wounds at their first defeat in the competition's brief history. Come what may, nothing is century and Gatting weighing in for useful runs, Randall and Jesty, it seems, will be consigned to the scrumpy tent today.

Pakistan, now third favourites behind West Indies and England, meet New Zealand at Edgbaston. As meet New Zealand at Edebaston. As was shown on Thursday, all depends on the Pakistanis' upper order making runs – and lots of them. Their bowling, without Imran and Qadir, has, as they say, a military medium look to it.

All reserved seats for the England against Pakistan match at Lord's on Monday have been sold. There will be a limited number of ground tickets on sale today. ground tickets on sale today.

The former England betsman. Peter Willey of Northamptonshire. Peter Willey of Northamptonshire, faces a three-mouth ban and a £600 fine from the South African Cricket Union (SACU). Willey who was banned from playing for England for taking part in an unofficial tour of South Africa last year, played for Eastern Province last winter.

Ali Becher, a SACU official and All Bacher, a SACU omeial and former Test captain, is calling for these penalties on Willey after arguments in the dressing room following the Benson and Hedges night semi-final between Eastern Province and Western Province in Johannesburg, when Bacher ordered the allower between between heads

"This happened very soon after a very close game and tempers were high. It seems a harsh penalty but I would be prepared to pay a heavier fine and avoid the suspension.

Counties to adjust their sights

By Our Rifle Shooting Correspondent

Fifteen English counties, Glamor gan, Ulster and East Scotland have entered teams for the inaugural inter-counties tifle meeting spon-sored by the National Westminster Bank at Bisley today and Sunday.

The meeting organized by Hampshire Rifle Association, will be the first full United Kingdom counties event outside the main Bisley meeting programme, and should give the counties a chance to "work up" before the county short and long range championship next

The weekend programme in-cludes a short range match for the Colonel H Memorial Trophy, in memory of Lieut-Col H Jones, the Parachute Regiment Falklands VC, a long-range event for the Natwest Inter-Counties Trophy, and an individual medal shoot at 300

First strings in tune for Wimbledon Spaniard

The two American giants continue to tune their racket strings for Wimbledon Jimmy Conners and John McEnroe reached the semi-finals of the Steela Artois tournament at Queen's Club yesterday with victories of accustomed ease and, as the seedings suggest, they will probably complete their preparations by qualifying to meet in the final tomorrow.

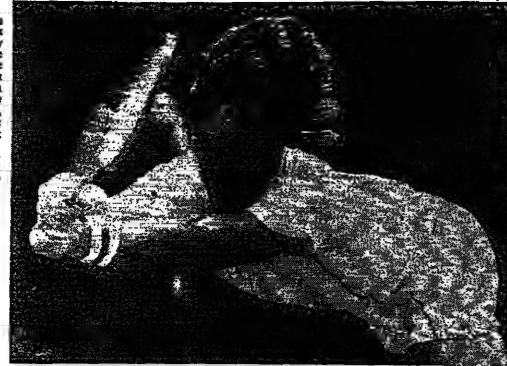

Connors, the top seed, enchanted an appreciative and smiling audicoce of 3,500 spectators for little more than an hour as he grunted his way to victory over Steve Denton, another American, 6-2, 6-4. His strokeplay, and the ferocity of his determination, was as unmistakable as the roar of an avalanche.

The match on court No7 presented a marked contrast. On the centre court there was laughter; on the other side of the bushy green hedge there were Kevin Curren, the sixth seed, and Denton's doubles partner, was a set up against the Australian teenager, Patrick Cash, before he let himself down. In the sixth game of the second set, nothing went right. Foot faults, double faults, late and unfavourable decisions.

Curren's patience snapped, A struck the offending lines-woman rightly earned him a warning. Audible obscenities aimed at the umpire then cost him a point. The South African, scemingly carrying the whole unbearable weight of the authcritics on his shoulders, went on to drop a set for the first time in

But Cash, the conqueror of the fourth seed. Vitas Gerulailis, and also warned about his behaviour, continued to lose his footing ("what is wrong with these shoes" he boomed) and Curren regained his poise and a place in the semi-finals, by 6-4, 3-0, 6-3. John Alexander, a

The mild manneed Vicents Fernandes, of Argentina habitrally wears a broad and innocent smile. It seemed a cruel injustice when he was compelled to return to his Sucros Aires home last year and union 11 of Europe's leading events because of the Falklands conflict.

More course.

With a halfway aggregate of 131, a marvellous performance on this fi.647 yard course which overlooks the English Channel; Fernandez is in sight of his first success in Europe to beat Severty Hills (72 yesterday) by five strokes and Rae Rast, a South African of three days professional standing (75), and Meredith Marshall (75), by seven. Sprinkle a little stand and it would have conjured up a picture of a bullfight as Miss Figueras-Dotti destroyed her playing pariner, Dale Reid, under a blazing sun. Miss Reid had lain second overnight three strokes behind, but the was no since the PGA championship of 1979.

Everyone was delighted for him, including his playing partner, Sandy Lyle, who scored a 66 himself on one of those clear, still days that Jersey tourism, who promote this tournament, like to boast about. The 12-yard putt which Fernandez holed across the first green for a 100, was by far the longest in a round in which he struck the ball quite beautifully with consistency and from 12 yards for an eagle three at the second to widen the gap to five strokes and thereafter Miss Reid strokes and thereafter Miss Reid faded completely from the scene. Miss Figueras-Dotti, on the other hand, holed two long putts with a silken touch for hirdies and was virtually out of sight at the turn, seven ahead of the rest of the field. She let a shot slip away here and there coming home, her concentration, she said later, impaired by growing tiredness. But is may of course be that the lack of a serious challenge destroyed her appetite. The battle, then, was for second place. Miss Huke, carrying her own hag in her own independent way, played a superb round away from the glare of attention struched to the overnight leaders. Apart from three It was also the first of four twos and since he made the other times with putts of about eight feet that alone is abundant evidence of his strokes. In his life Fernandez has overcome respectors handicapa, including a congestival himp, but the his own complaceny. Fernandez goes into the second half of the tournament with a six-stroke lead but with the knowledge that his closest parwer is the determined defending champson, Bernard Gallacher, Free birdies in a 68 took Gattacher into second spor on his own, one stroke ahead of Lyte and the first round leader Michael King (72). Judges in scoring climbdown

By Jenny MacArthur

After an extraordinary climb down by the judges here, Harvey Smith, on Sanyo Shining Example, and Patrice Delaveau, on lena A were declared joint winners of the Prix Longines at the Nations' Cup meeting yesterday, even though they meeting yesterday, even though they had ended the accumulator competition on a different score.

An accumulator class is judged on the number of fences jumped within the time allowed, two points are awarded for a fence cleared and one if it is knocked down. After a bell is if it is knocked down. After a bell is rung the rider can jump one more fence and the clock is stopped as he lands over that fence.

When the bell was rung for Delayeau he had just started jumpint a fence. Under this year's revised FEI rules a fence is considered to be jumped if the horse has left the grand when the bell has left the ground when the bell tings. This means that the next

The point at issue yesterday was whether or not lens A had actually left the ground when the bell was rung and was therefore entitled to include the next fence in his score. The judges thought he had and awarded him 30 points, but many spectators including Ronnie Massa-rella and Ned Campion, the Chef d'Equipes of the British and Irish teams respectively thought that he had not left the ground when the bell rang and should therefore have only 28 points.

The situation was aggravated by the fact that the time-keeper had stopped the clock after the penultimate fence. Mr Massarella penulumate tence. Mr Massarella complained to the judges who said Delaveau's score stood. Mr Massarella's representation became more urgent after Harvey Smith and Sanyo Shining Example completed a fast, business-like round giving them 29 points which would have put them into the lead if, as many thought, Delaveau's last fence was invalid.

give him the same prize money as the wanter but he would remain in second place. To the astonishment of all, when the official results were announced Smith and Delaveau were given as the joint leaders.

Dunning in the running

By a Special Correspondent

Lionel Dunning and Boyse. narrowly beaten for the previous day's main jumping prize, won the Crosse and Blackwell Challenge Stakes at the South of England show, Ardingly, Sussex, yesterday. An upright of planks troubled half the 30 horses who contested the first round and only four went on to the jump-off. Sunning and his German-bred eight-year-old produced an-other impressive faultless round. Mark Heffer on Saucy Brown and Peter Richardson on the former Foxhunter champion, Rye Hill, who hit the last, were only fractionally slower. Heffer took second place with the only other clear.

Earlier yesterday Dunning on San Francisco had been runner-up in the Canon Camera Top Score,

Piggott the master on Miramar Reef

Lester Piggott rode a masterly race to win the Foodbrukers of Esher Handicap at Sandown yesterday on the 6-1 chance Miramar Reef. The four-year-old, who disappointed in soft ground at Newbury last time out, relished the sunshine, faster conditions and the expertise of the champion jockey.

The bottom weight Tudor Bob made the running until the favourite Hill's Pageant went on for Joe Mercer at the two furlong marker however, Piggott soon coaxed Miramar Reef into a challenging position, and the combination took command well inside the final furloug to win by threequarters of a Results Page 18

Neill gets Nicholas

By a Staff Reporter

After several years' being apstaged in the transfer market by Tottenham Hotspur, Arsenal have apparently surprised their north London neighbours and several other illustrious clubs by signing Charlie Nicholas, the talented 21-year-old Celtic forward.

Although Nicholas will not put his signature to a contract until Although Nicholas will not put his signature to a contract mutiafter Arsenal return from a summer tour of Indonesia, he is beleived to have agreed to the move. Until recently it seemed that Nicholas was determined to join Manchester United, but after a visit to Highbury this week he said that he was greatly impressed.

The fee's expected to be about £650,000, but the decisive factor was almost certainly the personal terms offered to Nicholas. Despite a recent quiet match against England, he has shown enormous potential at Celtic, where he has scored more than 50 grains this season.

Nicholas announced that he had agreed to join Arsenal while with the Scottish internatinal team currently in Canada. He said he felt that Arsenal had good players and were capable of becoming a bighly successful side. He added that though be had been inpressed with the people at Liverpool, he was more impressed by the Arsenal management of Terry Neill and Don Howe.

David Blake traces Mrs Thatcher's path to triumph over 1,500 days of office

The anatomy of a Conservative landslide

This had been the biggest landslide of recent times and it is also by all conventional rules of politics one of the most surprising. We should not forget now surprising

After four weeks of campainging in which a big gap turned into a chasm, it all has a feeling of inevitability. Yet at the halfway stage of its life the Thatcher administration looked likely to be moving to the biggest defeat in modern politi-cal history rather than the biggest victory.

Only two years ago the economy was in deep trouble and law and order in our cities was breaking down in the face of riots so bad that the Home Secretary was planning to reopen Army camps because the prisons were too full to hold the rioters. Our politics have come a long way since.

After 1.500 days in office, Mrs Thatcher has set an enviable number of political records. It is the first time since 1900 that the same person has won a working majority twice in a row, It is the first time since 1959 that a government has been reclected after a reasonably full term. No government increase in its majority on anything like this scale. It is as big a win in terms of seats as 1945, an ironic reversal of Mr Wedgwood Benn's Predictions landslide victory of 1945 proportions.

Four main strands make up this turnround: The success of Mrs

Every MP was subjected to fighting for nomination by his party in an open contest at every election; and control over choosing the party leader was taken away from the parliamentary party and transferred to a wider electoral college, made up

Yet it was the parliamentary party which provided the biggest upset, when it chose Mr Michael Foot in preference to Mr Denis Healey to be its leader. When it did so, Labour was riding high in the polls with around 50 per cent of the vote. Within six months, the party had split with the leading right-wingers, Dr David Owen, Mrs Shirley Williams and William formed an alliance with the Liberals, seemed to take votes from the Conservatives rather than Labour. But throughout the whole of the summer of 1981, the Labour Party was torn apart by Mr Wedgwood Benn's campaign to wrest the deputy leadership from Mr Denis

At first the SDP, which

Democratic Party.

When Mr Benn was beaten at Brighton in the autumn and a coalition of right-wingers and supporters of Mr Foot gained control of the national executive, Mr Foot used his power to ensure that Mr Benn kept control of the influential home policy committee, where he was able to press for left wing

It is still too early to judge whether Mr Foot's handling of the Labour Party's problems between his election and Thursday's defeat was disastrous misjudgment, the problem of a man faced with a problem with no solution, or the only strategy which could have preserved the degree of unity he kept.

Opinoin polls showed continuously that most people had two complaints about the Labour Party, that it was too extreme and too divided. The problem facing Mr Foot was the same as that facing any leader, that he could not deal with the problem of extremist without making the problem of disunity more public.

This really burst into the open with the selection of Mr Peter Tachell as Labour candidate in the Bermondsey, constituency, a traditional docklands stronghold in south London. There was much wrong with Mr Tatchell as a Labour candidate for that area, but what made matters worse was that Mr Foot first said that he was not an endorsed leading a party which had two. The split of the anti-Conservative vote made the scale of the triumph possible. Whether that reflects the fact that Labour left of centre vote and had fallen group or that those who left for the SDP are renegades who have harmed democracy is likely to be one of the main topics of debate for the next five years. It is clear that the next election will be fought under the first-past-the-post system. If anyone is to heat Mrs Thatcher they will have to find a way of gathering together the anti-Conservative vote.

None of that seemed appar ent either to the members of the SDP or the Labour Party two years ago. They thought that the election would be lost by the Government on its economic record, as elections have been in the past 20 years.

It is certainly true that even by the unimpressive standards of the British economy, our economic performance over the past four years has been bad Output is down from its 1979 level, manufacturing has shrunk dramatically and the country's unemployment has grown by one person every 63 seconds since the Government took office. The number out of work has gone up, after allowing for seasonal factors, for 42 months

The Government's success in selling its economic policy was part of a much wider triumph in persuading the people that it represented a new idea of what Britain stood for. At its core was 'the resolute approach" and ar the core of that as a credible doctrine was the Falklands war. What began as one of the biggest British humiliations of the present century turned into a triumph; and with that came governmental confidence that as long as they were determined in what they were doing they would carry the day. The attitude permeated through economic management, trade union relations and institutions like the Civil Service.

candidate "and as far as I am Without the Falklands war, concerned he never will be" and Mrs Thatcher might have crawled back to a good second place in the election; with it she was triumphant. Right through the campaign the "spirit of the Falklands" was what Labour most feared. Although not introduced overtly by the Prime Minister, it kept cropping up in code, with references to Britain being strong and respected egain. No one ever lost votes by winning a war; but in a country which had seen 30 years of had lost its ability to unite the declining world influence, a under the control of a small symbolic to many people,

The Daily Express calls on Mrs Thatcher not to purge her Cabinet of wets. "She is at her most effective when her convictions are regularly tested in debate. and a Tory Cabinet should reflect all the different strands of opinion within the party."

The Daily Star urges the Prime Minister to be bolder and more imaginative in tackling the misery of unemployment. "She should also resist the temptation to surround herself with yes-men."
